Karl Heinrich Marx, one of communist ancestors, was born May 5, 1818 in Trier, Germany. He was educated in a variety of German colleges, including the University of Jena. He was an editor of periodical socialism and a key figure in the Man's Work Association. Maks co-wrote his best work, The Communist Manifest (1848), and his friend, Friedrich Engels. The max most important job, however, can das Capital (1867), analysis of the capitalist economies. He died March 14, 1883 in London, England. Abstraction presents the most important work and endurance from Max's enormity corpus, this collection ranges from the Hegelian idealist to his young socialists to maturity to his later works. Organizing both and in rough chronological order, the selections include writing on historical materials, extracts from Capital, and political work. If not max, then some other would take selected writer ~ Karl Marx (On the Jewish question, Aliens of Labor, the German Ideology) A philosophical inversion of Hegel, very interesting and also depression: I am a salted slave, a kog at the wheel of society. There are still many that are true here. When I read this time around, I reflected on how historical conditions at that time that Max wrote was like these, no max, the clash was instantly never inevitable. When we consider this in light of the hegel, we can observe that even after successful communist revolution (meaning the ancient sovereign being overthrowd and private property was abolished), man did not really be exempt from his condition of slavery. Man isn't yet everywhere free. Stalingrad was only a prime controversy between the Egelisians to the left and on the right. a new synthesis has not yet displayed this opposition between left and right. But Max sets his material philosophy in opposition to the hegel. His material design has replaced Hegel's concept of the Spirit's evolution that we observe in the phænomenal world. Declared in simple terms: For Geel, the Spirit of God is in trouble; to max the material world determines minds. The most interesting piece of this volume written chose was for me the one about the German Ideology. Really appreciate Max, however, requires that one should first have read Hegel.the inter-text dialogue between Marx &pgt; Hegel is fascinating. According to Hegel's story has evolved to the point where men are no longer slaves, as man, the subject of the Persian King, for example was, with the Hegelian idea that everyone, kind of people, free, has been in the world since the age of the German mediaval Christians, but communism has not had the success of truly free everyone in today's world. Instead, he puts great power in the hands of politicians, who still wave of power by promising to liberate the mass are happy in exchange for voters. This is at least as old as Adams. There must be something more, but what? What comes after? How is freedom going to come to everyone? Perhaps only a poet, like Walt Whitman, can be free. Even if we see that Communism (he tried) they found wishes, I can't tell whether Hegel or Max had better explain history. I find my take between the two as I once took between Ptolemy's description of the cosmos, and Copernicus'. Can the sun revolt all over the earth, or the earth around the sun? Both the Ptolemaic System and the Kopernik explain all the observations, and there is no evidence of conclusion to force one to accept truth of one or the other system, until Newton writes his primary Mathematica. Who is Newton to settle into real political philosophy and the nature of question stories between Hegel's vision of world history, and Karl Marx? Max saw the tragedy that foreigners at work produced in the lives of workers, and had high hopes of changing the world for the better. But when it writes the following, that in communist society. where no one has an exclusive area of activity and each can train himself in any branch he wants, the society regular production of the general, making it possible for me to do one thing today and another tomorrow, hunting in the morning, fish in the afternoon, criticizing animals in the evening, criticizing after dinner, as I like , without ever becoming a hunter, a sin, a slave, or a critic. (pg. 119), one cannot be impressed by its formidal swift. The experiences of friends who escaped Communism don't reflect anything like the idyllic promises of pastoral tranquility that Max would hope for. one graduate from #313 school and is assigned to the #9 where someone will perform code for trousers for the rest of one's life. How has communism succeeded in saving foreigners's hands at work? He hasn't won. He merely succeeded in taking private property away from those who worked for him, and given formidable power given the politicians who helped in this large-scale scale. Maks did not live to see the outcome of his mind as these were played out on the world history scene, and I wondered what he would think if he could see how his mind led directly to the death of millions of people. Again, the conflict was inevitable, and Max was right about a lot of things that he observed in the world. Here is a brief brilliant Karl Marx cartoon by the BBC in their series on the history of world leaders. Those interested in Karl Marx, would be the first to read Adam Smith's wealth in the Hegel Nation and philosophy of History. All these books are worth the time they are required. ...
