L. James. It was the first in a series of novels, Fifty Shades, which follows the deepening relationship between college graduate Anastasia Steele and young business mogul Christian Grey. It is notable for its explicitly erotic scenes with elements of sexual practice involving BDSM (bondage/discipline, domination/subordination, and sadism/masochism). Originally self-published as e-book and print on demand in June 2011, the publishing rights to the novel were acquired by Vintage Books in March 2012. Fifty Shades of Grey topped the bestseller lists worldwide, selling more than 125 million copies worldwide by June 2015. It has been translated into 52 languages and has set a record in the United Kingdom as the fastest-selling paperback of all time. The book's critical reception, however, tends to be negative, with the quality of its prose generally seen as poor, while its BDSM image has been directed at criticism from different perspectives. Universal Pictures and Focus Features released the American film adaptation, which was released on February 13, 2015, and received unfavorable reviews, despite the fact that it was a box office success. The second and third volumes of the original trilogy Fifty Shades Darker and Fifty Shades Released were published in 2012. A version of the Novel from a Christian point of view, Grey: Fifty Shades of Grey as Told by Christian, was published in June 2015 as the fourth book, Dark: Fifty Shades Darker, as Christian said, published in November 2017, is the fifth book in the series. The plot of Anastasia Ana Steele is a 21-year-old college senior attending the Vancouver branch of Washington State University in Vancouver, Washington. Her best friend Katherine Kate Kavanagh, who writes for the college newspaper. Because of illness, Kate can not interview 27-year-old Christian Gray, a successful and wealthy entrepreneur from Seattle, and asks Ana to take her place. Ana finds Christian attractive as well as intimidating. As a result, she stumbles through the interview and leaves Christian's office, believing that everything went wrong. Ana doesn't expect to meet Christian again, but he shows up at the store where she works. While he buys various items including cable ties, camouflage tape and rope, Ana informs Christian that Kate would like some photos to illustrate her article about him. Later, Kate encourages Ana to call Christian and arrange a photo shoot with his photographer friend Jose Rodriguez. The next day Jose, Kate and Ana for a photo shoot at the Heathman Hotel, where Christian stays. Christian asks Ana for coffee and wondered if she was dating anyone in particular. Jose. Ana replies that she is not dating anyone. During the conversation, Ana learns that Christian is also lonely, but he says that he is not romantic. Ana is intrigued, but believes that she is not attractive enough for a Christian. Later, Ana receives a package from Christian containing copies of Tess's first edition of the d'Urbervilles, which stuns her. Later that night, Ana goes out drinking with her friends and ends up drunk typing Christian, who informs her that he will come to pick her up because of her intoxicated condition. Ana goes outside to give her a fresh air, and Jose tries to kiss her, but he is stopped by Christian's arrival. Ana leaves with Christian, but not before she learns that Kate is flirting with Christian's brother, Elliot. Later, Ana wakes up to find herself in Christian's hotel room, where he scolds her for not taking care of herself properly. Christian then reveals that he would like to have sex with her. At first he says that Ana will first have to fill out the paperwork, but later returns to this application after being done with her in the elevator. Ana goes on a date with Christian, where he takes her on his helicopter, Charlie Tango, to his apartment. Once there, Christian insists that she sign a non-disclosure agreement prohibiting her from discussing everything they do together, which Ana agrees to sign. He also mentions other documents, but first takes it to his game full of BDSM toys and gear. There Christian informs her that the second contract will be one of domination and submission, and there will be no romantic relationships, only sexual. The contract even prohibits Ana from touching Christian or making eye contact with him. At this point, Christian realizes that Ana is a virgin and takes her virginity without forcing her to sign a contract. The next morning, Ana and Christian have sex again. His mother arrives a few minutes after their sexual encounter and is surprised by the encounter, having previously thought Christian is homosexual, because he was never seen with a woman. Christian later takes Ana to eat, and he reveals that he lost his virginity at the age of 15 one of his mother's friends, Helen Lincoln, and that his previous dominant/submissive relationship failed due to incompatibility. Christian also reveals that in his first dominant/submissive relationship he was submissive. Christian and Ana plan to meet again and he takes Ana home where she discovers several job offers and admits to Kate that she and Christian have had sex. Over the next few days, Ana receives several packages from Christian. These include a laptop to allow her to explore BDSM's lifestyle with a contract in mind; communicate with him, as he never owned a computer before, and get a more detailed version of the dominant/submissive dominant/submissive She and Christian emailed each other, with Ana teasing him and refusing to abide by parts of the contract, such as only eating products from a particular list. Ana later meets with Christian to discuss the contract and becomes overwhelmed by the potential of ABE and the potential to have a sexual relationship with a Christian who is not romantic. Because of these feelings, Ana runs away from Christian and does not see him again until her college graduation, where he is a guest speaker. During this time, Ana agrees to sign a dominant/submissive contract. Ana and Christian meet again to discuss the contract, and they go over the rigid and soft limits of Anna. Christian slaps Ana for the first time, and the experience leaves her both lured and a little confused. This confusion is compounded by Christian's generous gifts and the fact that he brings her to his family. They continue the agreement without Ana signing the contract yet. After successfully landing a job at Seattle Independent Publishing (SIP), Ana further bristles under the restrictions of the non-disclosure agreement and her complicated relationship with Christian. The tension between Ana and Christian eventually comes to mind after Ana asks Christian to punish her to show her how extreme BDSM's relationship with him can be. Christian fulfills Anna's request by beating her with a belt, and Ana realizes that they are incompatible. Devastated, she breaks up with Christian and returns to the apartment she shares with Kate. James's 2012 trilogy, Fifty Shades, was developed from the Twilight fan fiction series, originally titled Master of the Universe, and was published by James sporadically on fan-fiction sites under the pseudonym Snowkin's Ice Dragon. The play featured characters named after The Twilight characters Stephanie Meyer in The Twilight, Edward Cullen and Bella Swan. After comments regarding the sexual nature of the material, James deleted the story and posted it on his website, FiftyShades.com. She later rewrote Masters of the Universe as an original work, whose main characters were renamed Christian Grey and Anastasia Steele, and removed it from her site before publication. Meyer commented on the series, saying, "It's really not my genre, not my thing... Good on it, she's doing well. That's great! The redesigned and extended version of Master of the Universe was divided into three parts. The first, titled Fifty Shades of Grey, was released as an e-book and paperback print on demand in May 2011 by The Writers' Coffee Shop, a virtual publisher based in Australia. The second volume, Fifty Shades Darker, was released in September 2011; and the third, Fifty Shades Released, followed in January 2012. The coffee shop of the writers had marketing budget and relied mainly on a book blog for early advertising, but sales of the novel were boosted by word of mouth recommendations. The erotic nature of the book and the perceived demographic of its fans as composed mainly of married women over thirty led to a book called Mama by some news agency. The book was also reportedly popular with teenage girls and college women. By the release of the final volume in January 2012, news networks in the United States began reporting the Fifty Shades trilogy as an example of viral marketing and the growing popularity of female erotica, attributing their success to the restrained nature of electronic reading devices. Due to increased interest in the series, the license for the Fifty Shades trilogy was revoked by Vintage Books for re-release in a new and revised edition in April 2012. The attention the series attracted also contributed to renewed interest in erotic literature. Many other erotic works quickly became bestsellers after the success of Fifty Shades, while other popular works, such as Anne Rice's Sleeping Beauty, were reissued (this time without pseudonyms) to meet higher demand. On August 1, 2012, Amazon UK announced that it had sold more copies of Fifty Shades of Grey than the Harry Potter series, although it sold more than 450 million copies worldwide, compared with 60 million copies in Fifty Shades of Grey. Fifty Shades of Grey topped bestseller lists around the world, including in the UK and the US. By June 2015, it had sold more than 125 million copies worldwide, and it was translated into 52 languages and set a record in the UK as the fastest-selling paperback of all time. The critical response he received was mixed to negative reviews, as most critics noticed poor literary work qualities. Salman Rushdie said of the book: I have never read anything so poorly written that was published. This made Twilight look like War and Peace. Maureen Dowd described the book in The New York Times as written like Bronte, devoid of talent and said she was dumb and poorly written. Jesse Kornblut of The Huffington Post said: As a reading experience, Fifty Shades... it's a sad joke, a puny plot. Princeton University professor April Aliston wrote: While no literary masterpiece, Fifty Shades is more than a parasitic fanfic based on the recent Series of Vampire Twilight. Entertainment Weekly writer Lisa Schwarzbaum praised the book as B and praised her for being in the classroom on her own. British writer Jenny Colgan wrote in The Guardian: It's hilarious, highly readable and sweet and safe, like BDSM (bondage, sadism and masochism) erotica can be without compromising trade trade act, and praised the book for being more enjoyable than other literary erotic books. The Daily Telegraph notes that the book was the defining page-turner, noting that the book was disturbing and intriguing. The Book-Enquirer reviewer described the book as guilty pleasure and escapism, and that it also touches on one aspect of female existence. And acknowledging this fact - perhaps even appreciating it - shouldn't be a cause for guilt. The New York Herald stated that the book will not win any prizes for its prose and that there are some extremely gruesome descriptions, although it was also easy to read. (If you're the only one) who can suspend your disbelief and your desire - if you'll pardon the expression - slap the heroine for having so little self-esteem, you might enjoy it! The Columbus Dispatch stated that despite the clumsy prose, James does cause the page to be turned over. Metro News Canada wrote that suffering through 500 pages of internal dialogue of this heroine was excruciating, not in the intended way, sexual. Jessica Reeves of the Chicago Tribune wrote that the original material of the book is not great literature and described it as depressing. The book has received some awards. In December 2012, she won in the People's fiction and Book of the Year categories at the UK National Book Award. In the same month, Publishers Weekly named E.L. James the Publishing Man of the Year, whose decision was named and summarized in The Christian Science Monitor by the LA Times and The New York Daily News. Earlier, in April 2012, when E.L. James was listed as Time magazine's 100 Most Influential People in the World, Richard Lawson of The Atlantic Wire criticized its inclusion for launching a fanfiction trilogy. The Fifty Shades of Grey controversy drew criticism for its BDSM images, with some BDSM members saying the book confuses the practice with abuse and presents it as a pathology that needs to be overcome, as well as the wrong and possibly dangerous methods of BDSM. Coinciding with the book's release and its surprising popularity, the trauma associated with BDSM and the use of sex toys has increased dramatically. In the year since the novel was published in 2012, the number of injuries requiring emergency room visits has increased by more than 50% since 2010 (the year before the book was published). It's supposed to be due to people unfamiliar with both the proper use of these toys and the safe practice of slavery and other kinky sexual fetishes in an attempt to recreate what they read. There has also been criticism of the fact that BDSM is part of the book. The Archbishop of Cincinnati, Dennis Schnurr, said in a February 2015 letter, Storyline presented as a novel; however, the main theme is that slavery, domination and sadomasochism are normal and enjoyable. Feminist anti-trump organization Stop Porn Culture has called for a boycott of the film, based on the book, because of its sex scenes related to slavery and violence. Timothy Laurie and Jessica Keane, by contrast, argue that the film fleshes out a otherwise legitimate concept, such as consent, in a living, breathing and sometimes uncomfortable interpersonal experience, and dramatizes the dangers of unequal negotiation and the practical complexity of defining their limits and their respect. Some critics and scholars have expressed concern that the nature of the main couple's relationship is not BDSM at all, but rather typical of abusive relationships. In 2013, sociologist Professor Amy E. Bonomi published a study in which several experts read and evaluated books on the characteristics of intimate partner violence, or IPV, using CDC standards for emotional abuse and sexual assault. The study found that almost every interaction between Ana and Christian was emotionally offensive, including harassment, intimidation and isolation. The study group also observed widespread sexual assault within the CDC's definition, including Christian's use of alcohol to circumvent Ana's ability to consent, and that Ana exhibits classic signs of abusing a woman, including an ever-perceived threat, stress management, and altered identity. In 2014, a second study was conducted to examine women's health, reading the series, compared to a control group that had never read a single part of the novel. The results showed a correlation between reading at least the first book and showing signs of eating disorders, having romantic partners who were emotionally abusive and/or involved in harassing behaviors involved in binge drinking in the past month, and having 5 or more sexual partners under the age of 24. The authors could not conclude whether women already experiencing these problems were involved in the series, or whether the series influenced such behavior after reading, creating the main context. The study's lead researcher claims the books romanticized dangerous behaviour and perpetuate dangerous standards of abuse. The study was limited to the fact that only women under the age of 24 were studied, and there was no distinction between women who enjoyed the series and women who had a strong negative opinion about it, having read it only out of curiosity because of media hype or other commitments. At the beginning of the media hype, Dr. Drew and sexologist Logan Levkoff discussed in The Today Show whether it perpetuated violence against women; Levkoff said that while it's The theme, this trilogy has nothing to do with it - it was a book about consensual relationships. Dr. Drew noted that the book was horribly written in addition to being disturbing, but stated that if the book enhances women's real life sex life and intimacy, so be it. Censorship in March 2012, branches of the public library in Brevard County, Florida, removed copies of Fifty Shades of Grey from their shelves, with an official statement stating that it did not meet the library selection criteria and that reviews for the book were poor. A spokesman for the library stated that this was due to the sexual content of the book and that other libraries had refused to purchase copies for their branches. Deborah Caldwell-Stone of the American Library Association said: If the only reason you don't choose a book is because you don't approve of its content, but there's a demand for it, the question is whether you're fair. The public library usually has very little to prevent the book from being on the shelf if there is a demand for information. The Brevard County Public Libraries later made their copies available to visitors because of public demand. In January 2013, in Mackay, Brazil, Judge Rafael Keiros Campos ruled that bookstores throughout the city should either be completely removed from shelves or make sure the books are wrapped and placed out of the reach of minors. The judge stated that he had been asked to make such an order after he had seen children reading them, basing his decision on a law that stated that magazines and publications whose content is inappropriate or inadequate for children and adolescents can only be sold if they are sealed and with warnings about their contents. In February 2015, Malaysia's Interior Ministry banned the Fifty Shades of Grey shortly after the film adaptation, ban after allowing them for three years in local bookstores, citing moral considerations. Media adaptation Home Article: Fifty Shades of Grey (film) Jamie Dornan and Dakota Johnson played the roles of Christian Grey and Anastasia Steele Screen adaptation of the book was produced by Focus Features, Michael De Luca Productions and Trigger Street Productions, with Universal Pictures and Focus Features providing the rights to the trilogy in March 2012. Universal is also a distributor of the film. Charlie Hannam was initially cast as Christian Grey alongside Dakota Johnson as Anastasia Steele, but Hannam resigned from the role in October 2013, with Jamie Dornan announced for the role on October 23. The film was released on February 13, 2015, and despite the popularity at the box office, the critical reactions were mixed and negative. Soundtrack to the movie Home Article: Fifty Shades of Grey: Original Soundtrack to E. L. James James James The film will be released on February 10, 2015. The first single Earned It by the Weeknd was released on December 24, 2014. On January 7, 2015, Ellie Goulding's second single, Love Me Like You Do, was released. On January 27, 2015, Australian singer Sia released the third single on the soundtrack, Salted Wound. The classic Album of Songs, selected by E.L. James, was released on September 11, 2012 in EMI Classics under the name Fifty Shades of Grey: The Classical Album, and reached number 4 on the Billboard Classic Music Albums chart in October 2012. The Seattle P-I reviewer positively wrote that the album would appeal to both fans of the series and those who do not intend to read any of the gray shades. The Fifty Shades of Grey trilogy has inspired many parodies in print, in movies, online and on stage. In November 2012, Universal Studios tried to prevent the release of Fifty Shades of Grey: XXX Adaptation, a pornographic film based on the novel, citing copyright and trademark infringement. Smash Pictures, a producer, later responded to the lawsuit with a counterclaim that lots or all of Fifty Shades material had been placed in the public domain in its original Twilight form, but later capitulated and halted production of his film.
