This pilot fish works for a manufacturer that uses aging systems for which they have already been paid for - and in this economy it has no interest in trading. Automated systems use software that monitors systems and writes in an Access database, giving codes, fish says. The problem is that each of the 20 systems has its own computer and its own database, and to get reports that you had to go to each computer and make a copy of each database. The fish's task is to come up with an easier way to get reports - and while it's on it to see if it can get the system to send text messages or email notifications when certain conditions are met. The first call was to the manufacturer, where a representative told the fish it was impossible and suggested that the company update the machines. The fish politely refuses. After a few days of tinkering, it has created an SQL database and imported the design of the Access database. It then goes to each of the automation computers and sets the database on it to use linked tables in the new SQL database. The fish then writes a web front end to access the data and adjusts switches in the SQL database to send texts or emails based on the criteria the management gave it. And when he's done, it's all working, and he's not that crazy. Then he gets a call from a machine salesman. He wanted to know if we wanted to improve our equipment, as he had heard about our problem, fish said. I explained that I got things to work without a problem. He was quiet, and then he said, Can you tell me how you did it? Because I have other clients who want to do the same. I politely declined and hung up. Tell Sharkey how you did it. If you're like most business owners and entrepreneurs (and your mother raised the right) at this time of year, you focus on how to thank those who do business with you all year round. In addition to donating now during the holiday season, there are five things you can do to show your gratitude and gratitude. These practices also make customers, customers and patients at the centre of your giving them celebrity recognition and status while helping you build your brand. (Win, (Win, win and win!) In addition to sending a real thank-you gift (pay attention to my suppliers: I like things that twinkle), put one or two of these practices to increase the trust of your customers, customers, patients and perspectives: Smile pretty. Forget about the stock. First of all, they look awful. Second, they're a waste of money. Third, they look terrible. In your marketing, use photos of actual customers on your website, in your ads, your marketing materials, and more. We have tested it for our customers and real customers earn every time it comes to results. Make their stories yours. The content you share in your marketing, such as newsletters and blogs, instead of marketing for you, represents the success of your customers. Tell the story of their problem before you work with you and then after they have had success with your business. If you can include the real tangible results, even better. And ROI for pieces like this can be huge. An article I wrote about our clients to the financial adviser more than two years ago still delivers clients to this day and is responsible for the business of over a million dollars in my company. Q&quot; for ROI. Create a regular customer interview feature in your content. This not only builds social evidence of your perspectives, but also makes more interesting content for your readers. It also gives your satisfied customer something to share with friends and family. Try to make Facebook Live when visiting in person with a customer, or use software like Zoom.com interview remotely. You can even simply send the customer a list of questions they answer each month in their newsletter or on your regular customer feature blog. Either way, you create content that makes your customers look good and your business looks good at the same time. Pers for players. Recently, I was at one of my most common wasted bars (this mane needs constant taming) and tried to use the Groupon I had purchased. They wouldn't take it because I was already a client. I've spent thousands on this business before. Their decision not to honor something they gave to people who had never spent a cent with them was enough to make sure I never went back there. Let your customers know they're your VIP all the time. Remember what they forget the most. Every year we send a festive gift to our customers, but most often we forget the holiday - the date of creation of the company. A company's birthday from the entrepreneur (founding date) is often more important than their birthday, and we send our customers a cake to theirs. We also send a funny birthday surprise to their real birthday and shock and atlatz to welcome them to the agency. Our customers are constantly reminded that they are important to us, not just from Thanksgiving to new year. Because they know. Back to Top Posted on November 23, 2020 Your Neighbors Below are playing loud music. Again. How come they're not tired of partying? And why do they choose songs with such a heavy smooth bit that the glass in the cupboard vibrates every two seconds? What can you do to get the peace you deserve? What are you supposed to do? The human mind tends to spin in circles when faced with a problem without a clear solution. It is easy to forget the big picture and get lost in anger and self-pity, to waste our precious time, energy and enthusiasm. Wouldn't it be nice if we always remember to put things in perspective? Wouldn't it be more effective to face all kinds of problems, from small annoyances to life-changing emergencies, with calm act, sharp focus and fearless determination to take the most effective possible action quickly? Alas, people are not. Too often we let anxiety or greed take advantage of the best of us and make a concise or short-lived decision that we quickly regret. Other times we spend weeks or months deadlocking, retelling the same arguments, we cannot accept the compromise needed to advance with any of the options available. Buddhists talk about getting lost in the little me. In this state of mind, we forget the big picture and focus on the little one. We begin to take our daily problems too personally and paradoxically, becomes less able to them in a more effective way. And that's the opposite of big picture thinking. Let me share with you a story related to the big picture, thinking... In 1812, Napoleon Bonaparte's French army invaded Russia. After the decisive battle of Borodino, the capture of Moscow and hence Napoleon's victory during the war seemed inevitable. Unexpectedly, The Chief Russian Commander-in-Chief Mikhail Kutuzov made a highly controversial decision to step down and allowed the French to capture Moscow. Much of the population was evacuated, evacuating with them. The city itself was set on fire and large parts of it burned to the ground. After waiting in vain for Russia to capitulate, Napoleon had to retire in the middle of a bitterly cold winter. He won the battle, but he lost the war. The campaign ended in catastrophe and near destruction of the French army. What can we learn from this historical lesson? 1. Focus on the Napoleon implications focused on the important part: capturing Moscow. No one can accuse him of thinking he's small. However, he neglected that the Russian army could still fight even after it had taken away the country's most important city. So after all, Moscow was not an important target? Success expert Brian Tracy has a lemma test: things are important to such an extent that they have important consequences. Things are irrelevant to the point that they have no important consequences. When faced with a choice, ask yourself, what would be the consequences of each option? Want to spend an hour studying or watching netflix's new series? What would be the consequences of any opportunity? Netflix can sometimes be a better choice, but it helps put things in perspective. Want to keep your apartment on your own or pay for cleaning? Will it be the consequences of every opportunity? Do you want to meet this acquaintance of yours or catch up on your work? What would be the consequences of any opportunity? The choice can be different for different people. An aspiring director may have a legitimate reason to choose Netflix. Personally, cleaning your own apartment can be relaxing and nourishing, even if the rental economy looks convincing because you earn a high hourly rate. This is where you will need a basic idea of who you are - what your goals, values, and aspirations are. 2 Flip Defeat into victory Kutuzov managed to turn Russia's defeat into a historic victory, recasting the problem in a broader context: moscow's loss should not mean a loss of war. Despite the symbolic significance attached to the Kremlin, the churches, the priceless treasures that have been preserved in the city for centuries, the result of the campaign is ultimately determined by the strength of the other armies. If you can accept this results-oriented perspective, many of your personal losses can be turned to victories. There are few events in human life, life, good or absolutely bad, and it usually takes many years to recognize in retrospect what role it has played in your history. That's why we have every reason to look for the good in the things that happen to us. This is a very practical attitude, far from relentlessly positive thinking. After all, if something unfortunate has happened to you and you find good sides in this circumstance, then you will be better positioned to take advantage of these good sides. Say noisy neighbors affect your productivity. What if it's a blessing that's disguise? How can you turn defeat into victory? Maybe you're too serious about life and learn how to have more fun. Join your neighbors or go for a walk instead of working; Maybe you just wanted to be productive while instead procrastinating on social media. Now that your procrastination has been interrupted, stop and acknowledge this much greater obstacle to your productivity; Maybe you're too sensitive to interference. Take this opportunity to exercise, ignoring noise and doing the best you've ever done; Maybe you have a victim psychiatry, and a sense of injustice wears you out more than any real inconvenience your neighbors may have caused. Try to accept this drop in your productivity the way you would accept bad weather. Get used to finding opportunities in your problems. This is the main picture of the picture 3. Ask about Napoleon and Kutuzov were trusted advisers to discuss their issues. In general, getting a different perspective - or a few - can only help inform your understanding and lead to better solutions. Just make sure that the people who give you advice are competent in a particular area where you need to try. Paying money for advice can also be a reasonable investment. Lawyers, tax accountants, doctors spend years learning how to help people like you in life more successful, more complete lives. Quick legal advice can save you a fortune or even protect you from great trouble. A medical examination can reveal potential problems and help you stay healthy and active for years to come. Even large, complex dilemmas in your work or romantic relationships can be solved more effectively by partnering with a coach or therapist or, of course, with the help of a wise friend. 4 Beware of Biased Tips Many imperfect solutions happen in response to an imperfect piece of advice that you have chosen to act on. This advice often comes from a biased party. For example, we are often encouraged to buy something that is supposed to need: Protect your skin from harmful UV rays by using a special lotion. Strengthens your health by taking multi-secret. Connect with your friends by sending them elaborate gifts. Light up your weekend by eating delicious pastries. Become more productive by getting a faster PC. However, however, are not necessary. Some, such as sunscreen, have legal benefits when used correctly. Others, like multivitamins, only make a difference to a small group of people. Advertisers of these benefits inevitably want to narrow your attention to reassign the importance of their product. They often present it as the only solution to your problem, whether real or imagined. After all, the skin can be protected from the sun by wearing appropriate clothing. Health can be better strengthened by consuming a balanced diet and getting regular exercise. Spending time or talking on the phone with your friends is the most important way to connect to them and is almost free. Your weekend can be divorced by doing something you love. You can become more productive by focusing on the tasks that have the most important consequences. A faster PC can reduce performance by making multitasking easier and enabling you to get distracted. There are other sources of imperfect advice. Politicians also often want us to focus on a particular big picture excluding alternatives. Even loving parents can be to blame for this. They can advise their children to choose a career path that is safe and respected, based on their big picture, which in life should earn a living. A child may disagree, based on another big picture, that a person's life should make sense and satisfaction. Bottom LineIt is human nature to make rushed, emotional decisions based on incomplete information, then regret these decisions later. You can protect yourself from bad decisions by striving to achieve the big picture when looking for careful consideration. Focus on the consequences of your decision before considering how you feel about it. Play with the cards you have received, but look for opportunities in any situation and you will find them. Ask for advice knowing mentors, but beware of biased people who have an opinion, but do not necessarily have your best interest in mind. Still, remember that the real big picture comes from hard-won experience. Legendary military commanders Napoleon Bonaparte and Mikhail Kutuzov were wounded on the battlefield. Clear thinking comes from putting your big picture to the test of reality. More Thinking Tips ClearSweet Photo Credit: Haneen Krimly via unsplash.com unsplash.com
