Chris pratt shirt guardians 2

When the first images of Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 were made public, the internet became fascinated by Star-Lord's new shirt. The graphic t-shirt featured text in what appeared to be a foreign language, leading to creeping speculation about what the shirt's message was. Now that Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 is playing in theaters, costume designer Judianna Makovsky clarifies what the graphic shirt really is. I think people read a lot more about it, Makovsky said Fashionista, laughing. When I started the film, [director] James Gunn said he wanted to give everyone more of a cool rock star feeling and I said, Well, usually it means a graphic T-shirt. He said: Perfect, I want a graphic t-shirt. So we did a lot of graphics that would advertise either products or candy and we actually used alphabet [of the Klyn language] from his first film. It's very simple; it says Gear Shift on it. The rock star look is suitable for a legendary outlaw like Star-Lord, although Even Chris Pratt wasn't quite sure what the shirt said when ComicBook.com asked him about it. Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 currently has a composite score of 87.99 ComicBook.com, the third highest composite score ComicBook.com for a comic book movie of all time. While yes, the second installment of the chris pratt-driven unsuitable superhero franchise returned with more fight scenes and a lot of narquential humor - this time Dave Bautista socially awkward Drax gets to show off his comic chops with some one-liners - GoTG2 has changed things with a Marvel movie over on feelings. There is even a new character, Mantis (Pom Klementieff), whose superpower is literally empathy (she is an Empath) and the ridiculously adorable Baby Groot (voiced again by the National Treasure Vin Diesel) will seriously give you all the things, as well as more villains, like the embodiment of pure gold of perfection, Ayesha (an excellent Elizabeth Debicki). A staggering amount of Easter eggs and superstar cameos abound - plus, fresh new costumes by Judianna Makovsky.The three-time Oscar nominee, who also designed both Captain America episodes, plus the next two Avengers movies, took a break from the Marvel set to chat with Fashionista about Peter Quill (Pratt) blue graphic shirt that launched a million Reddit yarns, its grittier take on the Guardians superuits, originally designed by Alexandra Byrne (even saucy raccoon Rocket, voiced by Bradley Cooper, gets a new look), and - OMG - Baby Groot mini-Ravager outfit. Aw.... Star-Lord/Peter Quill (Chris Pratt) and Drax (Dave Bautista). Photo: Chuck Zlotnick/Marvel StudiosFirst, we need to know, what's the real story behind peter Quill blue long-sleeved graphic shirt that is causing so much speculation? What does that mean? I think people read a lot more [laughs]. When I started the film, [director] James Gunn said he wanted to give everyone more of a cool rock star feeling and I said, Well, usually it means a graphic T-shirt. He said, Perfect, I want a graphic T-shirt. So we did a lot of graphics that would advertise either products or candy and we actually used alphabet [of the Klyn language] from his first film. It's very simple; it says Gear Shift on it. [Note: Redditors were ok!] From left to right: Gamora (Zoe Saldana), Star-Lord/Peter Quill (Chris Pratt), Drax (Dave Bautista) and Rocket (voice of Bradley Cooper). Photo: Film Frame /Marvel StudiosYou mentioned James Gunn wanted everyone to watch a little more rock 'n' roll. How did you incorporate this into the updates in the Star-Lord jackets? The costumes from the first movie were absolutely brilliant, but I think James wanted to go from there and make them a little more real, and as I said, have a little more of a rock star feel to it. So they were a little thinner and just a little more based on reality, rather than superheroes. In accordance with the same techniques that the clothes were made in the first film, we just got out of there and made new versions that were a little thinner, a little less crazy. We new characters in this film, namely the high priestess Ayesha and her super-advanced galactic race, the Sovereign. Ayesha looks a little different in comics. Where did you draw inspiration for her look, especially the spectacular dress she originally wore? We wanted to do a riff on the set, set, working with the production designer [Scott Chambliss]. I wanted it to have a very metallic and complex feel. One of the things James Gunn said is that everything in the world is gold. But we didn't want it to look like Las Vegas. So it wasn't going to be glittering, something like that. But also, we wanted something that was pretty sexy as well as being armor. We also paid a little tribute to Flash Gordon. Everyone seems to like Flash Gordon, so I wanted to keep him in this world. It was very interesting to try to prevent this world from going to Vegas. After a while we decided that we couldn't make all the gold clothes because it would look like a show. So we decided to throw in navy blue and brown to pull it down to be more real, and for the maids not to use anything flickering or shiny. Their dresses are actually gold leather. Ayesha (Elizabeth Debicki). Photo: Film Frame/Marvel StudiosWhat textures and techniques have entered Ayesha's dress? It has a base that has a metallic bead on it, but not like a regular pearl, and plus that's a lot of leather work. There's metal in there and a lot of molding. But above all, it's a lot of leather goods. We tried more metal at first and it was too heavy. [Debicki] could barely get up when she had to sit and get up. She also wears five-inch flat shoes and is already six feet three. So we had to take into consideration the weight of the dress when we made it. People had to help her all because, to have this skirt fan like a tulip, people had to walk behind her to wear it for her. We had two versions of skirt: one to sit and one to stand. The one that would be entirely tulip all around and the one that was flatter in the back. So it was pretty anyway. Mantis (Pom Klementieff) and Drax (Dave Bautista). Photo: Film Frame/Marvel Studios What inspired Mantis' costume? He's a new character, and James has a very specific opinion and a style that he likes that is usually very simple and graphic. I have to go in a different direction on Ayesha, but [Mantis] is pretty much drawn from the comics. It was simply a matter of finding a technique with leather to make it more interesting than a simple flat leather skirt panel. Leather woven in there was fun to do. There is an open work, woven, double-faced leather; it is black and green and twists and petals up to the arm. Did you have to make a real costume for Baby Groot, even though it is mostly CGI? Oh yes, we did the costumes. We sketched it in our shop and then we did it the same way we did made the costumes ravage regularly. We had printed the fabric made to scale, just like we do the big ones, and we had to find zippers and things, all on a scale. A woman in our shop, Dorothy Bulac, has left. As if you were making doll clothes, we had a small model, which is a tiny little doll version, and it's the same thing do for Rocket. They used them on set so the actors could identify with them, so we made full costumes for them. I have to say that dressing Baby Groot was everyone's favorite thing. Well, duh.
