Throughout film history, few actors have earned as many accolades (and so many accolades) as Jack Nicholson. The legendary actor has earned 12 Academy Award nominations throughout his career, making him the most nominated male actor of all time. Among those nominations, he has managed to claim three victories and made history with his record (at the time) payday of between $60 million and $90 million (including a percentage of box office receipts) for his role as Tim Burton's Joker in Batman in 1989. With so many indelible performances, it's hard to identify the most essentials in Nicholson's filmography. However, we are tuning into the best of his big screen career, tracking the actor's decades of unforgettable roles.

1. Easy Rider (1969) Jack Nicholson in Easy Rider | Source: Columbia Pictures This ode to motorcycle counterculture actually focuses on the pair of cyclists played by Peter Fonda and Dennis Hopper (who also directs), but Nicholson presents a prominent performance as alcoholic lawyer George Hanson who makes friends on his travels. The role earned him his first Oscar nomination, launching a career that would lead Nicholson to be one of only two actors to receive nods to acting in each decade from the 1960s to the 2000s, alongside Michael Caine.

2. Five Easy Parts (1970) Jack Nicholson in Five Easy Parts | Source: Columbia Pictures As an oil worker facing a personal tragedy, Nicholson shines in this Bob Rafelson-directed drama, marking the second of six collaborations between the actor and the director. Nicholson and his co-star Karen Black, who plays actor Bobby Dupea's girlfriend, earned Oscar nominations for her roles, and the film is considered by many critics to be one of the best American films.

3. The Last Detail (1973) Jack Nicholson in The Last Detail | Source: Columbia Pictures In this film, Nicholson and Otis Young play two Navy men tasked with transporting a young sailor (Randy Quaid) to prison, and along the way, the trio get caught up in a series of adventures. Director Hal Ashby, who had previously directed the future cult classic Harold and Maude, finds the right balance between comedy and gravitates, bringing Darryl Ponicsan's title novel to the screen with ease.

4. Chinatown (1974) Jack Nicholson in Chinatown | Source: Paramount Pictures While many of Nicholson's previous films have escaped the cultural awareness of pop a bit, this misery roman Polanski is still as beloved as it was during its initial release. As private detective Jake Gittes, Nicholson possesses every second he is on screen and is his fourth Oscar nomination for this film noir classic. He would later relive the role for a 1990 sequel and directed the film himself, though he could not live at the same time as his predecessor.

5. One flew over the cuckoo's nest (1975) (1975) Nicholson in One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest | Source: United Artists At last Nicholson won her first Oscar for her role as Mac McMurphy in this Milos Forman film, which was the first to win in all five main categories (Image, Director, Actor, Actress and Screenplay). The film, which focuses on a criminal who clashes with the staff of a mental institution, is widely considered one of the best films in which Nicholson has appeared, a great compliment considering his prolific career.

6. The Shining (1980) Jack Nicholson in The Shining | Source: Warner Bros. It's hard to believe that Stanley Kubrick's masterpiece was not particularly well received by critics and was even nominated for the Golden Raspberry Awards, in honor of the worst in the films of the year. In the decades that follow, of course, it has come to be considered the best Stephen King film adaptation ever made and one of the greatest works of psychological terror in film history, and much of that credit goes to Nicholson's terrifying performance as a writer and family man who slowly goes crazy in an isolated hotel.

7. Terms of Love (1983) Jack Nicholson and Shirley MacLaine in Terms of Affection | Source: Paramount Pictures Nicholson has no shortage of charisma on screen, and it's that same charm he effortlessly takes advantage of for this James L. Brooks drama about the relationship between a mother (Shirley MacLaine) and her daughter (Debra Winger). The actor won his only Oscar supporting actor for the role of a retired astronaut who romances with MacLaine's character, adding every second of his time on screen.

8. Batman (1989) Jack Nicholson in Batman | Source: Warner Bros. In his career choices, Nicholson has skillfully moved from riskier projects to more commercial projects. This is the most obviously in the last category, as the actor brings the most famous villain of comics to cinemas like never before. Like the Joker, Nicholson manages to eclipse his co-star Michael Keaton and establish the definitive version of the Clown Prince of Crime, at least until Heath Ledger inhabited the role in 2008 for The Dark Knight.

9. A Few Good Men (1992) Jack Nicholson in A Few Good Men | Source: Columbia Pictures Corporation Everyone knows that famous line, and the powerful impact of that moment when Colonel Nathan R. Jessup propelled Nicholson to an Oscar nomination for this Rob Reiner film. Despite appearing in only a few scenes, the actor pocketed $5 million for the memorable performance and managed to elevate even the screenplay of The Social Network writer Aaron Sorkin.

10. As Good as It Gets (1997) Jack Nicholson in As Good as It Gets | Source: TriStar Pictures Reuniting with Brooks for this romantic comedy/drama, Nicholson won his third Prize for his role as obsessive compulsive curmudgeon Melvin Udall alongside fellow Oscar-winning Helen Hunt. Although the film Nicholson to enjoy his characteristic style of performance full of bravado, also allows moments of complexity and heart that give his character space to grow into a man better self-tested by the final credits.

11. About Schmidt (2002) Jack Nicholson in About Schmidt | Source: New Line Cinema An accessory to the awards circuit, Nicholson is sometimes criticized for his lack of reach, assuming roles such as arrogant, intimidating and exaggerated individuals. However, this Alexander Payne-directed film sees him go refreshingly against the guy like the starter Warren R. Schmidt in a quiet performance that earned him some of the best reviews of his career and his latest Oscar nomination to date.

12. The Deceased (2006) Jack Nicholson and Matt Damon in The Departed | Source: Warner Bros. Martin Scorsese finally won his management Oscar for his Boston crime saga and with good reason. The screenplay is airtight, and the film is filled with incredible performances by actors such as Leonardo DiCaprio, Matt Damon and Vera Farmiga. However, it all depends on Nicholson's role as the famous mobster Frank Costello, a part where the actor really sinks his teeth and the rare case in which an Oscar-worthy performance of his was not recognized by the Academy.

Next, we search for the title of each movie in Google Trends, which returns a number between 0 and 100 for search interest. For location, we leave worldwide to return the search interest of each movie in 250 countries where Google Trends can provide data. Of the 250 countries, 133 returned a result. Because we're only interested in movies that people can watch for Valentine's Day, we watch the full month of February 2019: February 1-28. When searching for the movie title, we were sure that the search results with movie or [Year] movie in the search message. Of the 100 movies, 9 did not return data for the search period or included names that were too general to return a result. As such, we omitted the following movies from the list: Creator!QNinotchkaOnceOneginTimUnder the Eiffel TowerWhen Brendan Met TrudyWimbledonTo map our best movies for each country, we used the film with the greatest search interest in that country during the month of February 2019. In cases where multiple movies tied as the main result, we searched again with the location changed to the specific country and compared the search interest for those best results. To determine the countries most interested in Valentine's Movies, we examined two metrics. First, we total all the search interest figures and then classify those countries from 1 to 133. Second, we counted the number of times a country had the best 100 search interest for a movie and then ranked the results from 1 to 4. Then we take the average of those two ranks to determine the overall scores of these countries. For the top film, we run the same process as for countries, but we classify the movies in both the total search interest and the number of times the title returned in a result set. Then we average Scores. Because Google Trends data fluctuates, this is not definitive data. (But it's a bit of fun, so who cares?) Picture: Getty Was this content helpful to you? You? You?
