Blue snake fish pokemon

From Bulbapedia, the community-driven Pokémon encyclopedia.
Feebas (Japanese: 𪛗 𪛗 Inbas) is a Pokémon-type Water presented in Generation III. It develops into Milotic when flattened with its beautiful state quite high, or (from generation V onwards) when negotiated holding a prism scale. Biology A prism scale formed on feebas skin is a wretched, old-looking, fishlike Pokémon with a light brown body covered in dark, irregular spots. She has big, deep eyes and big, pink lips. The tail and chest fins are dull blue and raged in appearance. The dorsal fin is triangular with a hole in the middle. Because of its poor appearance, it is largely ignored by predators, trainers, and researchers alike. However, this hardy Pokémon is capable of eating everything and living anywhere. It is often found in oceans and weed-choked lakes, even if only a little water is available. While there are many of these Pokémon that exist, populations tend to congregate in small areas. Once found, its dull wits make it easy to capture. Feebas is a source of research because of its vitality, despite being attractive and unpopular. In anime, Prism Scales are revealed to form naturally in Feebas in some cases. In the anime In the main series Important appearances In Ya See We Want An Evolution!, Haley's Feebas, known as The Loveliest Feebas of All, proved to be a powerful Pokémon without even evolving. In Wickedness in Wonderland!, one of Mismagius's illusions featured a Feebas belonging to Johanna evolving into a Milotic. In The Cuteness Quotient!, Jinny𪛗's Feebas, nicknamed Feeby (Japanese: 𪛗*hi-chan), competed at the Friendship Festival and evolved into Milotic during a battle against meowth. Feebas's small appearances debuted in Whiscash and Ash, where he bit Jessie's hair. In strategy begins at home!, the Rocket team was fishing for Goldeen in a lake with feebas. On the Historical Mystery Tour!, Dawn encountered a Feebas in Katu's Forest. In Big Sky, Small Fry!, Lana reeled in a Feebas while fishing and gave it to the main fisherman so she and Ash could use his boat. At Dewpider Ascending!, a Feebas was swimming along a river. However, Feebas can learn several moves from TMs and HMs, hatch from an egg-to-egg Movements, and learn new moves through Move Tutors, making it slightly more useful in battle. Feebas shares the name of its category with Magikarp. Both are known as Pokémon Fish. Feebas and Magikarp have almost almost Statistics. However, Feebas has a higher attack and special defense, while Magikarp has a higher special attack and defense. Both attack and defense stats for Feebas and Magikarp are reversed. They share the largest overall base stat increase of all Pokémon when they evolve: 340 (from 200 to 540). Both change appearances drastically after evolution, evolving into serpentine, dragon-like Pokémon. Feebas is the only Pokémon that requires modifying its status to evolve. Given that status stats are a hidden engineer in games in which Pokémon Contests are absent, a Feebas that has enough Beauty points will still evolve when leveled. The Prism scale, introduced in Generation V, was created due to the fact that there is no legal way to increase the beauty of a Feebas in Generation V games, while with FireRed and LeafGreen, players could trade Feebas to Ruby, Sapphire, or Emerald, and a haircut or grooming by Daisy Oak or the haircut brothers affects beauty in HeartGold and SoulSilver. This also makes feebas one of the few Pokémon that can evolve into a single stage through multiple methods in the kernel series. The others are: Ncadá, which evolves into Shedinja, but to do this, requires a Poké ball in the player's bag in generation IV onwards. Alolan Meowth, which evolves into Alolan Persian through friendship in Sun, Moon, Ultra Sun, and Ultra Moon; and through flattening up on the Let's go! Picatsu and let's go! Eevee. Eevee, which evolves into Leafeon through flattening near Moss Rock. Glaceon through flattening near an Ice Rock (from generations IV to VII), or Sylveon leveling up knowing a fairy-type movement and having at least two levels of love (from generations VI to VII); and in Leafeon through exposure to a leaf stone, Glaceon through exposure to an ice stone, or Sylveon through flattening up knowing a fairy-type movement with high friendship (in generation VIII). Magneton, which evolves into Magnezone through flattening in a special magnetic field (in generation IV through generation VII); and through exposure to a lightning stone (in generation VII). Charjabug, which evolves into Vikavolt through flattening in a special magnetic field (in generation VII); and through exposure to a lightning stone (in generation VIII). Feebas is unique among this list, since it is the only Pokémon that has been able to evolve into a single stage through multiple methods within the same game in a core series game at some point. The probability of finding a water tile with feebas on route 119 is about 1/73, with six possible fishing spots on 436 water tiles. On Mount Coronet, it is 1/132, with four possible fishing spots on 528 water tiles. If the player a Pokémon on each tile, the probability of each Feebas tile passing without unwrapping a single Feebas is 1/64 on Route 119, while on Mount Coronet it is 1/16. Feebas has the lowest maximum performance performance Pokémon, capable of reaching only 11 stars. Feebas has the lowest base special stat attack of any Pokémon, associated with Shuckle, Bonsly, and Alolan Sandshrew. Origin Feebas seems to be based on a bass, possibly the big mouth bass. It also looks like the sea axe. Its drastic transformation when it evolves seems to be inspired by the classic fairy tale The Ugly Duckling, where a small and weak duckling is treated as an outcast by other animals until it finally grows up to be a beautiful swan. Feebas source name can be a combination of weak (weak) and bass. Feebas is also vocally similar to phoebebus (Latin for shining one), possibly hinting at its milotic, sophisticated form. Hinbass can be a combination 𪛗 hin (bad) and bass. Hin can also come from the words behind (located on the back) or block.
