H. pylori does this by penetrating and weakening the gastric mucosa, making it susceptible to stomach acids, according to WebMD. WebMD explains that H. pylori can also cause gastritis and stomach cancer. The bacterium spreads from person to person by sharing food utensils, mugs and other items that enter the mouth. The most common symptoms of H. pylori are those associated with ulcers, since most people with this bacterium do not have any symptoms at all, according to the Mayo Clinic, unless they develop stomach ulcers. Ulcers.
