Beanie babies price guide 2020

Real estate sales roofers often look for the highly coveted beanie babies. Neighborhood real estate sales are a great place to discover a stash of beanie babies because these cute little plush toys were often someone's most expensive collectibles. If you find a group of beanie babies, you have two choices. You can either keep them as stuffed animal collectibles that you proudly display in your home. Or you can sell these attractive plush toys to beanie baby value. While you probably hope your newfound beanie children are worth a fortune, they may not be. And you'll soon find it easier to sell them if you ask for real prices. Keep reading our beanie baby value guide for the exact and recent selling prices of popular beanie babies. As Beanie Babies Born Back in 1993, stuffed animal salesman Ty Warner brought his beanie children to the New York City World Toy Fair. These small plush toys contain both traditional fillings and beans, or small, plastic, PVC granules. A mixture of materials allowed plush toys to create cute items. As Ty Inc. launched Brand to sell its beanie babies, Ty Warner formed a Ty Inc. corporation. He traded little plush toys directly to children and sold them in small specialty stores. Small stuffed animals were also wildly popular collectibles, mainly because Ty Inc. sold them in limited quantities. From time to time, Ty Inc. retired several Ty beanie children's designs. This led collectors to scoop up a large number of beanie babies for fear that they would soon be off the market. The Beanie baby craze continued throughout the 1990s, and the average value of each stuffed animal was wildly inflated. Beanie's children's production stopped in the early 2000s. Today there are thousands of beanie children on eBay and other online markets. With a huge number of these little plush toys on the market, many previously valuable beanie children have lost much of their collectible value. Beanie Baby generations nutshell Ty Inc. launched many generations of beanie babies. The first generation appeared in 1993 and consisted of nine original beanie babies. These cute little critters included water-based beans such as Legs Frog, Splash Whale, Flash Dolphin, and Pinchers Lobster. Terrestrial original beanie babies included Chocolate Moose, Squealer Pig, and Spot The Dog. Brownie Bear (later named Cubbie Bear) and Patti Platypus were also members of Original Beanie Babies. First generation plush toys have always had more beanie baby value compared to future generations. To determine the stuffed animal's proper generation, collectors look at the plush toy's swing tag (or hang tag). These tags are often associated with the stuffed animal's head or nearby body parts. A few plush toys tush tags (or bottom tags) are also an indicator of their generation. second, and third generation beanie infants are known as unique or rare beanies. Ty Inc. produces only a few thousand of each type, so they are quite collectible. And when in good condition, they tend to be one of the most valuable beanie babies. You'll probably find these desirable stuffed animals in a beanie baby price guide. On the other hand, beans from the fourth and next generation are not among the beanie children worth the money. These little plush toys are known as common beanie babies and were mass-produced by millions, reducing their collectible value. McDonald's Teenie Beanies Ty Inc. is always looking for ways to keep the beanie baby frenzy going. So, in 1997, the company ran a promotion that included smaller McDonald's Teenie Beanies of The United States children's Happy Meals. McDonald's is scheduled to distribute 100 million Teenage Beanies within five weeks. However, the Teenie Beanies were completely gone within two weeks. Since 1997, McDonald's has been running other shares in Teenage Beanie, most in 2019. While millions of these miniature beanie babies are still wrapped in their plastic packs, none of them have beanie baby value. Millennium-Era Beanie Babies Values and Market Prospects during the late 1990s, many beanie baby collectors assumed that these plush stuffed animals would no longer be available from January 1, 2000. In 1999, Ty Inc. officially retired several beanie babies, and there was no market reaction. These beans did not increase the value, and there was no spike in demand. This was the beginning of the end of the beanie babies. Collectors went into a panic and flooded eBay with tons of beanie babies. With so many beans suddenly on the market, their value fell like a rock. In despair, Ty Warner announced that all babies would cease production until 31 January 1999. His statement did nothing to calm the market down. In the early 2000s, most beans were worth about 1 percent of their original market price, says Zac Bissonnette in the book The Great Beanie Baby Bubble. Beanie Babies Evaluation Factors Several variables can affect a particular beanie baby's value. Firstly, a rare hat, produced in relatively small quantities, usually leads to higher prices. Beanie's baby's origin is also important. Origin can mean a certificate of authenticity or a documented story about a person who possessed little plush collectibles. Sometimes the manufacturer produces beans of the wrong color. Or, the beanie could have a brown nose instead of a tan nose. The label letter may have been incorrect. These production quirks often increased the beanie baby's value. Tags Beanie baby tags are very important because they can identify the beanie generation. Beanie's hanging tag and tush tag match. Damaged or missing can significantly reduce the beanie value. On the other hand, a tag error often results in a beanie baby's value. Hang Tag Let's say hangs tag (or swing tag) missing, damaged, or is bewildered by writing. If this is the case, the beanie baby's value decreases to almost nothing. Tush Tag Beanie babies were made with different types of tush tags. So, it's harder to fix (and price) a beanie child with your tush tag alone. Stuffed in 1998, Ty Inc. decided to stop stuffing beanie babies with PVC granules. Instead, the company switched to PE pellets, which were to be more environmentally friendly. So, beans containing PVC granules are not so common and can have slightly higher beanie baby value. Your beanie baby's tush tag will tell you what kind of granules the beanie baby contains. 15 Valuable Beanie Babies 2020 As you look at these beanie baby values, you will notice a sharp difference between the plush toy list and the selling prices. When the seller lists the item, they decide how much money they'd ask the beanie child. Then the buyer decides how much they are willing to pay for it. Note that the beanie's overall condition and tag condition are part of the equation. Demand for this particular bean and the number of beans on the market are also factors in the selling price. Peace Bear Listing Price: $2,500 to $5,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $1 to $5,000 Peace Bear (or Peace Bear) made its appearance in 1997 and was retired in 1999. Peace Bear tie painted fur came in two color schemes, but each bear is different. This energetic little beanie replaces Garcia the Bear, who also featured a tie-painted color scheme. Peace Bear is an embroidered peace symbol on the chest and was the first beanie child feature embroidered emblem. The Rarest Peace Bears are not a symbol of peace, and they are worth much more than beanies with a peace sign. Mystic Unicorn Listing Price: $2,700 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.99 to $50 Mystic Unicorn is a very popular beanie baby and was released in several different editions. This hot collector beanie is one of the rare beanie babies. You can't miss Mystic Unicorn's mane, which featured several different colors over the years. Mystic's horn, which comes in various styles and materials, ads his blue eyes are definitely key parts of his appeal. If your Mystic Unicorn has tag errors, he is truly a rare beanie and could be worth more. Pinchers lobster Listing Price: $3,500 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.99 to $500 Pinchers was one of the Original Beanie Babies. He was introduced in 1994 and retired in 1998. Pinchers sport a snazzy, dark red body, along with black eyes and two extra large nails. When pinchers first entered the market, he was tag a mistake called their Pinchers lobster. Beans with a typo have a higher value compared to beans without. Nana Monkey Listing Price: $4,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $11.50 This early edition beanie baby hit stores in 1995 and was retired during the same year. Nana featured soft brown fur with light brown feet, face, arm, and tail. Bongo Monkey replaces Nana, but both beans have different properties. If you can find the original Nana Monkey that shows Nana on her tush tag, you can have a high value beanie baby. Patti Platypus (Magenta) Listing Price: $6,000 to $10,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.99 to $500 Little Patti Platypus has always been a hot selling beanie baby. This early edition beanie came in several different versions, most of which are not particularly rare. However, if Patti has magic, she can be very valuable. Maguminal-colored Patti Platypus has always been the most popular among collectors. This is the oldest-edition Patti, and her magic coat gives her a distinctive style and a higher asking price. Snort Red Bull Listing Price: $6,500 Recent eBay Sale Price: $3.50 to $150 spunky-looking Snort Red Bull got his name in a rather odd way. In 1997, Ty Inc. was roughly hit with a copyright infringement lawsuit that included the company's then-named Tabasco Bull beanie baby. Tabasco Sauce manufacturers claimed that Ty Inc. has unlawfully used the brand name. To stop from the legal problem, Ty Inc. changed the bull's name from Tabasco to Snort. Both bulls feature red fur with a white nose, legs and horns. Some tag errors show the bull's original name, which is likely to give this version a higher value. Gobbles Turkey Listing Price: $6,750 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.99 to $6,000 Gobbles is another 1997-era beanie that came in several different style schemes. Some Gobbles beans had one round felt uvele, while others featured a two-layer waddle. Gobbles tail feathers were added at different heights, depending on the version. Tag errors can also increase gobbles beanie child value. Peanut Elephant Listing Price: $7,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.01 to $670 in 1995, Ty Inc. created the royal blue Peanut Elephant, which is now one of the rarest of rare beanie babies. The royal blue version was only around for a short time. Maybe royal blue color occurred in a color accident, or maybe customers really didn't like it. Whatever the reason why, Ty Inc. changed the peanut color to light, powder blue, and kids absolutely loved it. Peanut Elephant also came in grey and purple versions. Today, the royal blue Peanut Elephant loads more money than other versions. Halo Angel Bear Listing Price: $7,500 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.99 to $7.50 This special edition white hat baby was created symbolizes the small child's guardian angel, complete with halo and wings. Halo appeared on the market in 1998 and was quickly retired. If your Halo Angel Bear sports white fur with a white star, you may be one of the rare beanie babies. Tush tag errors also increase the beanie baby's value. Claude Crab Listing Price: $10,000 to $100,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.01 to $2,500 Earth-tinted Claude crab sports all the features of real crab. Claude has a shell consisting of greens, brown and darker blues. He also has a white bottom. He really looks like he might have climbed the sea goddess. Although Claude was previously listed for $10,000 in several online stores, the beanie owner announced that his real price is $100,000. Iggy with Iguana Listing Price: $15,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $.99 to $10,000 Pricey little Iggy the Iguana has had many different design schemes, making her very popular with collectors. Some Iggy variations feature rainbow colors, while others have a protruding tongue, and even other Iggys have different tag locations. If your Iggy Iguana has a tag-free print, it's a super-rare beanie. So, he's probably worth more than other Iggys in a similar position. Valentino Bear Listing Price: $19,000 to $42,300 Recent eBay Sale Price: $1.00 to $49 This little white-furred beanie sports a stylish red bow and bright red heart on the chest. Contrasting colors only add Valentino appeal. For a tiny portion of Valentino bears, you tick the misspelled name of the tag. This tag error can greatly increase the value of this beanie baby, and it makes him very popular among collectors. Brownie Bear Listing Price: $20,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $5.50 to $250.89 This charming little guy was one of the original beanie babies and was retired not long after he was introduced. Brown was a soft brown fur accented tan nose. The biscuit is one of the highest priced beanie babies. Later, Brownie identical twin Cubbie hit the market, but he's not as valuable. Hippy/Hoppy/Floppy Listing Price: $30,000 (all 3 bunnies) Recent eBay Sale Price: $4 to $240 Each member of this quirky bunny trio features soft, pastel fur and a matching bow. These bunnies were probably very attractive around Easter time. Because beanie babies were rarely sold kits, this three bunny group carries a hefty price tag. If it is in mint state, it is even better. Princess Bear Listing Price: $500,000 Recent eBay Sale Price: $1.99 to $9 Much Coveted Princess Bear is in class by itself. Introduced in 1997 after Princess Diana's death, this regal purple bear features a lovely white rose on her chest. Ty Inc. placed Princess on the market to encourage beanie children and Princess Diana lovers to donate late memorial fund. Princess Bear has a super-high price tag that can be designed to suit her elegant look. Princess Bear: An In-Depth Look Just Two Months After Princess Diana's death in August 1997, Ty Inc. issued this special edition of Princess Bear. Ty Warner promised that all proceeds would be sent directly to Diana, the Princess of Wales Memorial Fund. Ty Warner told retailers they can only buy 12 Princess Bears at once. As a result, collectors and Princess Diana fans thought they would be a limited edition beans, but they were wrong. When demand for princess bears grew, Ty Inc. made more of them, and that drove down the bean price. Today Princess Diana beanie baby is usually priced at $2 to $30 each. Remember that the price depends on the condition of the plush toy and the type of granules used. Listing prices may also vary depending on the point of sale. Princess Diana was not the only celebrity who inspired a special beanie child. Jerry Garcia, the late vocalist and lead guitarist of the Grateful Dead, was memorialized in the 1960s-style, tie-painted beanie baby bear.
