Follow Dana Jacobson: Twitter | Instagram October 14, 2011ESPN sportscaster Dana Jacobson is on a mission to prove in her own words that former fat girls can get healthy. Jacobson has eyes on his second half in Hartford, Conn., October 15. It gives espnW skinny in its running triumph.espnW: What made you decide to do the Philadelphia Rock 'n' Roll 1/2 marathon? Dana Jacobson: This half marathon has been coming for me for a long time. Although I always played sports as a child, I was also a chubby kid, then an obese teenager. I lost 100 pounds in high school on a diet that really wasn't the best idea for health wise: 900 calories a day plus workouts. No wonder I got it all back. I struggled with my weight constantly, dropping some cuts when I made fitness a priority and tried to manage my diet. About 10 years ago, I lost about half of what I gained back and decided with friends to train for a marathon. I had a stress fracture [in my foot] while training, and had to be charged for six weeks so it could heal. When I finally started running I had a lot of pain, so I just kind of abandoned the idea. I'd toy with him every so often, but I still had foot pain and he just didn't seem real. Last year I finally lost the rest of the weight -- 43 pounds. It changed my body and I started acting more. I felt better and better and better and better and better and their head coach, Bart Yasso. It's unbelievable. It gave me weekly running plans and made me realize that by running successfully every week I could do it.espnW: How do you stay motivated during training? DJ: I stayed motivated thanks to Bart a training schedule that gave me the opportunity to have little challenges and success along the way. I also constantly imagine the goal: finishing the race and doing something that at one point I never thought possible. Endorphins from rides are also quite powerful. When you get past four or five miles it's physically addicting, really!espnW: Is anyone surprised you during the race? DJ: Nothing really surprised me in the race – I run a variety of 5K and 10K races before and covered different types of races as a sports reporter. I liked how much fun rock 'n' roll 1/2 was. They have bands every mile or so and cheerleaders on their way out of local schools - all sorts of little encouragement you get along the way. I think the number of people who came out to cheer was astonishing. It was a special see.espnW: While you ran, what do you think about? DJ: When I was running I had music all the time because of my Nano. I had trained with music and it really made a difference because I just escaped into songs and let my mind wander. So sometimes I get into my music. I was looking for some scenery. I was also thinking about how well it would be to finish. Then I'd remember the advice I received from the folks at Runner's World, telling me to run that mile [to focus on one mile at a time]. I went back to my music and was thinking about 10 miles. The last mile I knew I was reaching my goal. There were a lot of runners around me and I was just looking around taking the stage, very proud that I achieved my goal. I think I can't believe that people running a marathon would be just halfway now. I felt like this was another step for me really shaking off the fat girl feeling I had for so long. About 10 minutes after that, I was even thinking: What my next half will be in Hartford in mid-October. After that, I'll decide if I'm going to try the full one. I think if I did, I'd have to do New York. I love the city so much and have heard nothing but amazing things about [the race]. Another option would be to train for a marathon with your brother. He just returned from work at the Department of Defense in Afghanistan. He was there with me at the Philadelphia Rock 'n' Roll 1/2 Marathon and run the Marine Corps Marathon. I think it would be great to train for a marathon and run the one he is. Maybe it's a little sister/big brother thing, or maybe a brother competition that would spur me, I'm not sure. Anyway, I know that I keep running because I was that's so much... it's funny because I hate it. It.
