The Nebraska-based Englishman broke the national record with a 45-pound behemoth that fought for 45 minutes. But perhaps the noteworthy steps Richard Hagen took to keep the fish that pulled out of the Missouri River late at night were not killed. These included storing a massive flat head in an unplugged deep freezer filled with aerated water and – after Hagen couldn't find an aquarium interested in the fish's stay - truck edging back to the river so he could release his prized catch back into the river. He got me wet when he left, the 61-year-old Hagen told the New York Times. I said goodbye and a happy life. "Two days passed between the time Hagen caught a straighthead named Brutus while fishing with his brother near Brownsville, and the time he let it go. RELATED: A giant white sea base could break the 67-year world record during which time Hagen weighed Bruta on a domestic scale (88 kilograms), found a certified scale in a local company (89 pounds) and contacted the Nebraska Games and Parks Commission to see the fish. He had a freezer in the back of the truck. On Monday, Daryl Bauer, head of the fisheries program for the Games and Parks Commission, said he was skeptical of a potential new record... until he checked the giant flathead. Looks like our record on the stick & amp; reel will now stand at 89 pounds! Bauer wrote. As of Friday morning, the record was still 80 pounds for a flathead soma pulled from the Loup Power Canal in 1988. Bauer, however, wrote that he needed time to complete the paperwork before Hagen's record was official. Bauer told the News-Times that he was communal because he had delivered the fish after gaining weight and capturing the images. It undersbues everyone's imagination, Bauer said. There's a state-recordbreaking som floating around. Hagen, who lives in Swanton, used bluegill as bait and fought flathead on a 50-kilogram test monofilament. Matt Seitz, game and parks conservation officer: This is the largest freshwater fish I've ever seen up close. I'm talking in depth with Matt Miles of KATFISH, a clothing brand in the fishing industry and, in particular, catfish in the market. It gives some excellent insight into what companies are looking for from fishermen when they hunt with who they are partners with. Check out KATFISH here: Visit my www.dietermelhornfishing.com website for links to all the fishing equipment I use, links to my YouTube channel and other social media, and contact me about travel with quides or questions. 53:52May 30, 2017 If you've ever hunted a som in late spring, especially in June, you've probably wondered why I can't catch a soma. Well, the month of June is probably the worst month to catch a catfish no matter where you go in the country. Catfishing from Mother's Day to July 4 can be difficult for a monster catfish, but smaller catfish eaters can still catch it if you're persistent. In this podcast, I talk about the somson network, what it means, and I tell you there's light at the end of the tunnel! CLICK HERE to link to MELHORN FISHING DIETER ON YouTube! Time on the water has a special meaning for me, as I'm sure for many of you, it has that fish. Part of the attractions is to be outside, but the love of fishing runs much deeper. For me, fishing is more than a weekend of razonod, it's a way of life. This short clip is from a video on my YouTube channel, Dieter Melhorn Fishing. This is my launch in the podcast fishing world, and I'm excited here.00:59May 8, 2019 2019
