Through Donna Marsh, Phone Transfer allows users to transfer a service from one communications company to another without changing their phone numbers. Mobile phone users have been doing this for years, when they changed carriers. Home phone users switching to competing landline carriers use the same technology. Whether you've decided to change your landline company or go completely wireless, here's how to make a smooth, successful key and keep your home phone number. Shop for a new carrier - wireless or landline - and make a decision based on plan options and service coverage. Choose a new operator by balancing the needs of your family or business with your budget, not the features of a new phone. Call the new operator and make sure your home number is portable. Order the key with the new operator you have selected. Your new company will take care of the details of the transfer. Switching from one home phone company to another will take several hours. A stationary switch may take several days. Maintain your existing operator so that there is no service interruption. You can continue to use your old phone service until the switch is complete. Reader David writes with this excellent advice for anonymity on the phone: I have to call someone from my mobile, but I did not want to get my number from their number. I know to use *67 at home when I want to do this, but cell dialing is different - you don't get this double dialing signal to know that you're limiting your number now. With your cell, just start the number you call with *67, as if the phone number starts with these three digits. The important thing to remember is that you will need to put 1 in before the area code, since cells usually do not need 1. For example, type *6719175551212 before pressing the conversation button will cause the caller ID receivers to read limited. On my phone, the caller ID appeared Private call by this method. It seems like a smart way to keep your number to yourself when you want to avoid getting to know him in the world. Of course, this is probably also the perverts one of the biggest weapons. Please use only for good.
