Go to the main content of Aloha mai kakou and welcome to the academic year 2020-2021! Our curriculum is designed and taught by a distinguished and interdisciplinary faculty that collaborates with more than 20 different Native communities and countless community organizations. As far as the American Indian Study Program at UCLA is dedicated to studying indigenous peoples as a land grant authority we are committed to directly engaging with and working with indigenous peoples in California and beyond. Among them, we have a special commitment to Tongva as taraxatom (Indigenous) tovaangar (Los Angeles basin, So. Channel Islands). We are in the midst of a global reckoning with the legacy of colonization, displacement and structural racism all accentuated by pandemics that lay bare deep differences and negative results faced by indigenous peoples and peoples of color. We will start this academic year with a new sense of power and importance scholarship, building research, teaching community and strengthening it. Our investment in AIS bachelor majors and small programs and its MA program is more important than ever. With humility, respect and optimism I look forward to welcoming you all in the near future personally and practically so that we can all continue to build on the legacy of the UCLA AIS program started over 50 years ago. As leaders of academic entities at UCLA dedicated to social justice, we stand in solidarity with those in Los Angeles and across the country fighting to end the country's violence against African-Americans, indigenous peoples, Latinx, Asian and other communities of color. - Read more June 5, 2020 As leaders of Native and Indigenous student and alumni organizations at UCLA, we condemn state and police violence against our Black relatives. We write to affirm our commitment to social justice and stand in solidarity with our Black community at UCLA, Tovaangar and all unceded territories. - Read more RAIN Saving American Indians Now! (RAIN) provides comprehensive support services for all students on campus to address a variety of needs: academic, personal, social, cultural and spiritual. AIR American Indian Recruitment (AIR) is a service serving Native students and providing resources to significantly support the journey to quality higher education. Admission ranked among the top programs in American Indian Studies (AIS), a Master's degree in arts, an interdepartmental program at UCLA draws from various departments; students choose the concentration area (History/Law/Politics, Economic Development, Social Relations or Language/Literature/Expressive Art), acquire skills that will allow them to conduct initial research through mentorship over 27 AIS affiliated UCLA faculty.
