Informational text structures page 2 answer key

The term text structure refers to how information is organized at one stage. The structure of text can often change in a work or even within a paragraph. Students are often asked to identify text structures or patterns in the organization of state reading tests. Understanding text structures can also help students draft and interpret arguments. That's why it's important for students to be exposed to different organizational patterns. This page briefly explains seven commonly used organizational patterns, provides examples, and then offers users free text worksheets and interactive online practical activities to help students learn this basic reading skills. Cause and effects: Some explanation of the results. Example: A dodo bird used to roam large flocks throughout America. Interestingly, the dodo wasn't frightened by the shot. Because of this, border guards would kill entire flocks in one sitting. Unable to sustain these attacks, the dodo was placed on the brink of extinction. Learn more about cause and effects in chronological order: information about the passage is arranged to the time. Example: Jack and Jill ran up the mountain to bring a bucket of water. Jack fell and broke his crown, and Jill tumbled after him. Learn more about a master drawing of chronological order that helps you set up and understand arguments. Comparison and contrast: two or more things are described. We discuss their similarities and differences. Example: Both Linux and Windows are operating systems. Computers run programs with them. Linux is completely free and open source, so users can improve or otherwise modify the source code. Windows is proprietary, so it costs money to use, and users are prohibited from changing the source code. For more information about prioritization and contrast order, see information expressed as hierarchy or priority. Example: Here are the three worst things you can do on a date. First of all, you could tell jokes that aren't funny, and you're laughing really hard at yourself. That makes you look bad. What's worse, you could hurt your date. A bad joke can cause a date to lash out at you, thus ruining your engagement. But the worst thing you can do is look slovenly. By not showering and properly grooming, you can reflect the date, and that's the worst thing you can do. Learn more about the Prioritization issue and solution: the problem is described and an answer or solution is suggested or explained. Example: 1,000 people die every year in drug or alcohol-related car accidents. Lives could be saved if our city accepted a free public service. By providing such a service, to endanger themselves or others. Learn more about problem and solution sequence/process writing: information is sorted in increments or process process in the order in which it occurs. Example: Cereals are easy to consume. First of all, produce the materials. Then pour the grain into the bowl, add milk and enjoy. Learn more about the sequence of spatial/descriptive writing: information is arranged in that space (top to bottom, left to right). Example: when you enter my bedroom, a window looks at you. On the right, I have a dresser and television and on the other side is the window of my bed. Learn more about spatial organization Do you think you recognize these organizational patterns?
