Uc berkeley personal statement sample

Useful tips and advice to prepare a compelling personal statement when applying for exam admission. Make sure to check the appropriate departmental website to find out if your statement should contain additional or specific information. What does this statement need to achieve? The personal statement should provide concrete evidence of your promise as a member of academia, giving the Committee a picture of you as a person. It's also where you represent your potential to bring to your academic career a critical perspective rooted in a non-traditional educational background, or your understanding of the experiences of groups historically underrepresented in higher education and your commitment to increasing the participation of a diverse population in higher education. What types of content can hear here? Anything that can give reviewers a sense of you as a person belongs here; you can repeat information about your experiences in your research statement, but any experience that demonstrates your promise, initiative, and ability to persevere despite obstacles belongs here. This is also a great place to demonstrate your communication skills and discuss your ability to maximize effective collaboration with a varied cross-section of the academic community. If you have encountered any obstacles or obstacles in your education, sharing these experiences serves both for the selection process, and for your nomination for scholarships. If part of your academic credentials isn't ideal, because of the challenges you faced in that particular area, that's where you can explain it, and direct reviewers' attention to proof of your promise for higher education. The basic message: your academic performance despite challenges It is especially useful for admissions committees considering nominating you to scholarships for diversity if you discuss any or all of the following: Demonstrated significant academic achievement by overcoming obstacles such as economic, social or educational disadvantage; Potential to contribute to higher education by understanding the barriers faced by women, indigenous minorities, students with disabilities and other members of groups underrepresented in higher education careers, as evidenced by life experiences and educational backgrounds. For example, attendance at a minority serving institution; ability to articulate the obstacles faced by women and minorities in the fields of science and engineering; Academic service promoting fair access to higher education for women and racial minorities in areas where they are under-represented. Leadership experience among students from groups that have historically been under-represented in higher education; Research interests focusing on under-served populations and understanding of issues of race or gender For example, research that addresses issues such as race, gender, diversity and inclusion; research addressing differences in health issues, access to education and attainment, political engagement, economic justice, social mobility, civil and human rights, and other issues of interest to historically under-represented groups, artistic expression and cultural production that reflect culturally diverse societies or voices that are not well represented in the arts and humanities. Graduating in xxxxx from a law school where I received instructions on concepts of democracy and the rule of law, I became a public official of the Policy and Law Committee of xxxxxxxx, dutifully and conscientiously executing the instructions of my superiors. In xxxxx, I was promoted to vice-president of a local court. As the name of my organization indicates, politics and law are in close marriage in China and this marriage informs the legal environment of today's China. At present, China's legal system has a dual role to play. On the one hand, in a country where political ideology dominates, the legal system largely becomes the instrument of government political will. At an underlying level, the degree of bureaucracy culture, is the tendency and behavior of the bureaucrats to oppose constitutional government and judicial independence. Therefore, compared to politics, the rule of law is always marginalised. By contrast, with the transition to a market economy, China is undergoing dramatic social and economic transformations. As the transition continues, the executive power over the economic life of society will be dramatically undermined and will lose its overall importance that it once enjoyed. This will be the optimal time for the rule of law to enter economic and social life with unprecedented intensity and breadth. The rule of law will be a remarkable power and may well be the driving force behind judicial reform. The confrontation between these two roles is essentially a conflict between Chinese traditional culture and the current social reality. It also reflects the conflict between China's cultural traditions and the real world, which has largely come under the influence of Western democracy and civilization. I wish to study the essence of democracy and freedom in the West, study the Western political and legal theories and doctrines of individual freedom and the independence of the judiciary. Many of western values share a boundary with the traditional values advocated by China's Confucian philosophy. If integration or incorporation between Western values and Confucian values is realised, then Chinese society as a whole can emerge from the valley of history. Prof. xxxx is a leading representative of Confucian philosophy in the China. In the book xxxxxxxxx that he published, he explores the possibility of the legacy of political theories in Confucianism to meet the needs of China's current and future construction of the judicial system and national constitutionalism. Prof. xxxx is a groundbreaking attempt, suggesting that Chinese scientists are seeking their own methods of establishing a free, democratic and independent constitutional government with deep roots in their own traditional culture. In my proposed LLM program, I wish to focus on two areas—comparative legal studies and international legal studies. With acquired knowledge in these two areas, I want to become part of the larger campaign to promote social and legal experiments in Chinese society. The key to the realisation of judicial justice lies in the establishment of a sound institutional mechanism. In comparative legal studies, I expect to systematically study European and American legal systems, the conditions for their emergence and development, and the composition of these legal systems. I will focus in particular on (1) the distribution of the judiciary, the legislative power, and the executive; (2) the system for selecting and appointing judges, (3) the non-administrative internal management of the Court of Justice. (4), how to construct a set of sound legal ethics, and (5) how to determine the social credibility of the judiciary. Then I hope to be able to do an in-depth comparative study of the Sino-American legal systems and the social and cultural soils that gave rise to these two systems. I can borrow many useful experiences from the U.S. legal system that can provide solutions to some of China's legal problems. In my research, I also want to reveal general rules for legal development in different countries. According to Tocqueville, different systems of jurisprudence have their own specialized features, with their individual historical tradition, concepts, systems of knowledge and methodology. The special thing about legal traditions, knowledge and methodology is deeply rooted in different historical backgrounds. In my study, I will examine how the construction of democracy and the rule of law is possible under different social and cultural traditions. The comparison between China's legal reality and legal practices with the United States will be my focus and hopefully the comparison will highlight useful methods that promote China's judicial reform and democratisation. In my international legal studies, I intend to examine whether possible measures can be used to facilitate China's judicial reform under the influence of external factors such as the WTO, specific provisions of international law, Western culture, etc. However, my most important concern in my study of western legal systems will be to understand how to systematically prevent and limit the encroachment of political power on the rule of law. I admire Prof. xxxx, as I like to identify as my my adviser, for its in-depth knowledge of Chinese society and its legal system. I wish to participate in the courses that he offers in the LLM program like China and the WTO, the impact of the West on Chinese law form. It would be a huge pleasure to work with him. In the meantime, I would also like to point out Prof. xxxxxx as another possible adviser according to which I would like to systematically study the impact of the WTO on China's legal system and many important issues in international trade law. I would like to study both public and private law, especially those immediately linked to the WTO framework. Although newly created, xxxxxx is located in xxxxxx region where I come from is the largest among the four cities directly affiliated with the central government. In the country's campaign to develop the West, xxxxxx plays an important role as the region's hub for the most vibrant economy and foreign investment. As the city becomes increasingly integrated with the rest of the world, lawyers with a good knowledge of international law will be in great demand. It is my sincere wish that I can be admitted to XXXX's LLM program. With its liberal academic atmosphere, intellectual tolerance and innovative spirit, xxxx as a prestigious world-class institution will expose me to the most accomplished faculty, the most nurturing education, and the best research environment. I will apply the knowledge I acquire from your program to the development of legal systems in western China. Once you've finished your program, I'll be back to my current organization. Your program helps me establish a groundbreaking precedent. Within the legal system of xxxx, none of the practicing judges have ever received a systematic Western graded legal education! This is completely incompatible with Xxxxx as a newly created city directly connected to the central government of China. Through your program, I will acquire knowledge and experience not only necessary for my personal development but also to perfect the legal systems of Xxxxx. This is very likely because as the only judge with a systematic academic education in a top American law school, I will stand great chances for successive promotions to leadership positions, which will put me in a unique and best position to implement my ideals. Therefore, my current application exceeds a personal level only. Level.
