The main screen is an overworld in which the player navigates the main character. Here, the menu interface is available, in which the player can set the Pokemon settings, items and gameplay. When the player encounters a wild Pokémon or is attacked by the trainer, the screen switches to a turn-based battle screen that shows the player Pokémon and the Pokémon involved. During the battle, the player can select Pokémon to execute, use an item, modify his active Pokémon or try to escape. All Pokes have health (HP): when Pokémon's HP drops to zero, it faints and can't fight until it's revived. After an enemy Pokémon faints, the Pokémon of all players in the battle receive a certain amount of experience points (XP). Once you've collected enough XP, you can move up the Pokémon level. Capturing Pokéon is another essential element of gameplay. A With a wild Pokémon, the player can throw a Poké ball at him. If the Pokémon are successfully captured, then the player will hold it. The factors for recording include the target's HP and the type of Pokémon Ball used: the lower the target's HP and the stronger the Pokémon Ball, the higher the capture success rate. While FireRed and LeafGreen are remakes of Red and Green (Pokéon Green was only released in Japan, while the US version was blue), they include usability improvements such as a contextual demonstration feature that allows players to search for data at any time. in the game. In addition, by continuing the saved game, players will display the last four actions, allowing them to remember what they are doing.
