You must change vehicle license plates when you receive new custom license plates, buy a new car or move to another state. Changing a license plate is a fairly simple procedure if you know what you are doing. Unscrew the four screws on the license plate using a Phillips head screwdriver. There are 2 screws on the top and 2 on the underside. Remove the screws one by one and set them aside. Pull off the license plate frame if there is one and set it aside. Remove the license plate and set it aside or discard if it is a dealer plate. Attach the new license plate, along with the license plate frame if there is one, by matching up the holes in the plates to the holes on the vehicle from the previous plate. Use the same old screws on your new plate or get new ones if the old ones are too rusty. Insert 1 screw into each of the 4 holes and tighten with your Phillips screwdriver. Put your new stickers (tags) on the new plate to make it legal. The license plate comes with instructions on where to put your new stickers. I was in need of an open/closed sign and didn't want (or have money) to go to the store and buy. I decided it would be fun to make my own out of license plates, barn wood, and an old wire hanger we had about around. Here are some of the things you need. You don't have to make an open and closed sign. Material in signEnough license plates to spell out what you want Carpet Tacks Kids wood (you need enough to spell out what to spell out). In this case, we used about 14 1/2 inches. A wire hanger A nailTools needed to make this projectCarpet tacks A nail A hammer A power grinder A chop saw sheet snips PliersIf you don't have a chop saw, that's ok. You can use tin snips to replace chop saw, but it won't be that easy. Once you have all the material, you have to decide what you want to do. Once you've figured all that out, get your license plates. Get out your tin snips/hack saw and cut license plates into the individual letters. Keep in mind that if you have older license plates with raised letters, it is best to use chop saw. If you have newer license plates that don't have raised letters, it's best to use tin snips. Arrange the letters in the word or words you want. Once you have steps one and two complete, get all the letters that you want. Take them and sharpen all the letters until the sides are not sharp. If you do not have a mill, you can also you a file, but a mill works best. When you're done grinding all the letters, order them and make sure they fit on your piece of wood. Use the nail and hammer to make a hole in the middle of the bottom and top of the license plate. Once you have done this to all letters, use the pliers to hold the mat in place while you nail them to wood. If you feel the need to add more matte tacks, then use them them Needed. Use the hammer to nail the nail to the wood. Out of your wire hanger, then cut off the hook and then in half. Once done, use the pliers to bend one end of the hanger into a small circle, then wrap the other end around the nail. You should now be able to hang up your sign. Robert Alexander/Archive Images/Getty Images One of the best resources to find a vehicle owner from a registration number is Docusearch. People can also find information by using websites, such as PeoplePublicRecords.org, SearchQuarry.com, or VehicleDataRegistry.com. Docusearch differs from other public records websites as it employs licensed private investigators to locate a vehicle owner, the website has lists of the states where it has direct contact with the local Department of Motor Vehicles and can guarantee that information including an address related to a vehicle is up to date. Docusearch's service first contact new users to verify their identity and then receive the results of a search within 1 business day. A detailed report is provided with the owner's name, address, car crickets, model and year and all financial information available regarding loans. A license plate search fee can be paid using Visa, MasterCard, American Express, PayPal or Discover. Forbes magazine reviewed the site's services and named them a Forbe's Favorite for the quality of results provided. Other sites that offer similar services using an automated system require a user to sign up and subscribe to a monthly plan to perform a search. These plans can be costly and the results do not always produce accurate results. License plates are a boring necessity. Fortunately, there are ways to jazz up that area on your vehicle. Items in this price range can be made of cheap plastic or materials that are prone to chipping or roasting.$10-$20: You can buy a decent quality license plate frame for under $20. They vary in size, style, material and durability. Over $20: License plate frames in this price range are in the most durable, best-made, and may include special features, such as the to light in neon colors. These frameworks can be costly, depending on the options they include. Key featuresSizeWhen you shop for the best license plate holder, the most important feature you need to consider is the size. First, find out the exact dimensions of the frame, such as height and width, to determine whether it will fit your specific state plate correctly. The thickness of your license plate is also something you need to factor in for a proper fit. Mounting TypeHigh-quality license plate frames usually come with either two or four screw holes. In general, two screws can hold a frame in place, but four screws will provide additional support. Plus, you need to make sure the frame doesn't rattle, and four screws can do a better job of keeping the license flush against your vehicle. Other ConsiderationsState Laws: Some states have laws on car license plate frames. They usually mean the size of the frames. Be sure to check with your state's Department of Motor Vehicles to make sure you comply with the law. For example, you don't want to buy a frame and later realize that it covers up important information on your plate that the authorities need to see clearly. Durability: This is one of the most important factors for choosing the best license plate cover. Cheaper lower-quality frames can corrode, fade or chip. Some products have UV protection that ensures that they will last longer. Others have a coating on the metal to protect them from the elements. Material: The best license plate frame material is typical metal; However, there are many options, including aluminum, zinc, and carbon fiber. The metal type affects the weight of the frame. Steel frames are sturdy, while alloy is more lightweight. While you may prefer an aluminum license plate frame, your friend might like chrome. It's a personal preference. Installation Kit: Many high-end license plate frames come with a package that includes screws, caps, washers and a screwdriver. Other products do not provide these items, and it can be difficult to find screw caps that match the frame. As a result, the screws can visually protrude. Number of frames: If you are looking for a license plate frame for both the front and back of your vehicle, buy a set that comes in a bundle. Some manufacturers only supply one per pack. Pay special attention to the description to make sure you buy the exact number that you need. Best License Plate Frame Reviews & Recommendations 2020 Best Overall GoPlates Custom Made Heavy Duty License Plate Frame Check Latest Price This anodized aluminum, heavy frame comes in six colors: black, blue, red, purple, orange and green. You can customize the frame with laser engraving, using one of 11 different fonts. The frame is washing, weather- and UV-resistant, and the company also contains a one-year colorfast The metal frame is strong and robust, and includes screw protectors for a nice finish. The printed letters are clear and well to suit the available area. The frame holds up well over time and does not oxidize or peel, even in harsh winter weather. Also, the color options are good and evenly match many different models of vehicles. Although the aluminum is thin, it can cover a very thick license plate. One problem is that the screw protectors may fall off over time. In addition, the frame letters are light gray, not light white, which means that the text of these custom license plate holders can be difficult to read from a distance. The color red may also look pink, and some states may have license plates that are a little smaller than this frame, which requires you to change it for the perfect fit. Best Value SunplusTrade License Plate Frame Check Last Price This narrow style, stainless steel frame does not block state registration tags. It has a chrome finish with materials that repel rust and corrosion. It comes with four screw caps, four self-tapping screws, four machine screws, four washers and a screwdriver. Its dimensions are 6-5/16 by 12-1/4 inches. The frame is elegant and polished to shiny chrome. While the lids that cover the screws are plastic, they perfectly match the frame. On the back of the frame, the metal stretches up a little so that the bottom of the license plate can fit tightly inside it. The product also frames the license plate perfectly. It is well made for a reasonable price, and the installation is easy. One problem is that the screws supplied with the kit may not be long enough to attach the frame to your vehicle. The screw caps may also fall off after a short period of use. In addition, the metal is very thin, the edges can be sharp, and some rust issues have been known to creep up even though the frame is made of stainless steel. Honourable Mention Ohuhu Matte Aluminum License Plate Frame Check Last Price This strong, rust proof, two-hole black license plate frame is made of aluminum and is coated with a black matte finish that does not shell. It is designed not to block registration tags in all four corners. This frame is simple, functional, sturdy, and attractive with a nice satin finish. It gives a clean and minimalist look, and the wide bottom covers the bottom screw holes. The black screw lid looks great, and the frame is easy to install. It's nice and easy yet solid enough to protect your registration tags in a powerful car wash. It also has small tabs to hold the plate in place. One problem is that the screw caps can be difficult to remove, and you may need a drill or other tools to remove them. The thick border at the bottom can also cover your state's motto, specialized text, or tags. You can hear the plate rattle a little when you close the trunk. One of the worst things to happen when installing a license plate frame is a rattling noise. If the screws are like as they may be and you still hear a noise, you may want to use glue to hold the plate more firmly in place. The best license plate protector will usually feature built-in spacers. This will put a space between the vehicle and the license plate, preventing vibration and protecting your car's finish. Spacers also keep debris from collecting behind the frame, which can damage your car. A plastic license plate frame is not as long lasting or reliable as a frame made of aluminum or carbon fiber. Consider stainless steel over plastic or chrome. It is very durable and will not chip or rust. Carbon fiber is also a good choice. Consider using stainless steel hardware because it will not rust, corrode, or damage the underside of the license plate frame. Several universal stainless steel hardware kits include popular screw styles. Screw caps can hide unsightly screws or give a more luxe look. Some types snap closed, but there are also security protections that are screwed on and help prevent license plate theft. Before buying a license plate frame, make sure the design compliments your vehicle. Otherwise, it may stand out and may not look very good on your car or truck. Road debris, salt and weather conditions can eventually dull the finish of your license plate frame. One way to extend its life span is by washing and waxing what you do with your vehicle. A: Many frames do not contain foam or other protection to prevent scratches. One solution is to add electrical tape, small rubber washers, or door bumper cabinets to the small tabs that wrap around the license plate. Q: Can I include a logo on a license plate frame? A: Many companies allow you to customize their license plate frames. This may include a favorite NFL team or special phrase or logo. There may be some limitations on the size and length of your request, depending on the manufacturer. Q: Can I put reflective letters on license plate frames? A: It depends on the product. Some frames may contain stickers that are reflective, while others use laser engraving, which will not produce the same effect as reflective letters. Final ThoughtsOur pick for best license plate frame is GoPlates Customized Heavy Duty License Plate Frame. It is strong, robust, and does not oxidize or peel. You can also customize it with one of six colors and customize it with your favorite phrase. For a cheaper alternative, consider SunplusTrade License Plate Ram. MORE TO READ
