There are 12 cranial nerves that are often forgotten by nurses, so with that in mind, here's a free review form that you use for your case studies and assessment forms. Author: Molly Smith DipCNM, mBANT • Reviewer: Dimitrios Mytilinaios MD, PhD Last reviewed: October 28, 2020 Reading time: 4 minutes If you're like most students, the mere thought of the 12 cranial nerves is enough to make you audibly moan. It is true that they are definitely one of the trickier subjects to understand when it comes to learning anatomy. But, don't be afraid - it can be done! In this article, we will walk you through what the 12 cranial nerves are, and how you go about learning them step by step. Ready? Let's jump in. Test your knowledge of cranial nerves with our unlabeled diagram: Download below! First of all, what are the cranial nerves? The cranial nerves consist of 12 nerves of the peripheral nervous system that come from brain nuclei and exit from the foramina and ruptures of the skull. This location of the exit, rostral to caudal, is what determines their numerical order (1-12). But what are their names and features? Now let's look at that. CN I: Olfactory nerve. Sensory nerve that carries information about smell to the brain. CN II: Optic nerve. Sensory nerve that brings visual information to the brain. CN III: Oculomotor nerve. Motor nerve that allows eye movement, narrowing of the pupil (miosis) and lens accommodation. CN IV: Trochlear Nerve. Motor nerve that plays a role in eye movement. CN V: Trigeminal nerve. Mixed nerve that delivers sensation to the facial skin. CN VI: Abducens Nerve. Motor nerve that plays a role in eye movement CN VII: Facial Nerve. Mixed nerve involved in facial expression, secretion of glands and taste sensation. CN VIII: Vestibulocochlear Nerve. Sensory nerve responsible for hearing, balance and movement. CN IX: Glossopharyngeal Nerve. Mixed nerve that allows swallowing, salivation, taste sensation and general oral cavity sensations. CN X: Vagus Nerve. Mixed nerve involved in glandal secretion, peristaltics, phonation, taste, visceral and general sensation of the head, thorax and abdomen. CN XI: Accessory nerve. Motor nerve that allows fonation and movements of the head and shoulders. CN XII: Hypoglossal Nerve. Motor nerve that allows tongue movements. Want to learn the cranial nerves in more detail? With our video tutorials, you can learn a topic in less than 30 minutes. The best way to visualize the cranial nerves is with a summary diagram. Take a look at the below. Overview With the 12 cranial nerves Try to understand and remember what you like from the labeled diagram, then try to label the the Nerves yourself with our cranial nerves labelling quiz exercise available to download below. This is a great way to start turning the gears and warming up your memory before taking our other cranial nerve quizzes (just one thing at a time – more on that next one!). If it's useful to you, you can also download the labeled cranial nerves diagram and use it to take notes. Download PDF Worksheet (blank) Download PDF Worksheet (labeled) Now let's look at some different types of cranial nerve quizzes that you take. There are several types of quizzes available on Kenhub, including basic and advanced identification, muscle facts, clinical question banks and even customizable quizzes. When it comes to cranial nerve quizzes, basic and advanced identification are the perfect way to hone your recognition skills. Thanks to our spun repetition algorithm, you will find that learning and remembering each nerve and its associated anatomy and functions takes no time at all. Which cranial nerve quiz do you take first?
