The system enables users to control remote startup and keyless access features with two-way advertising and comes equipped with a find feature to locate cars in crowded parking lots. The systems, including the Code Alarm, Prestige and Pursuit ports. CarLink is our first smartphone interface that built the legacy that has made us a market leader in remote startup systems for years, providing both OEM and the aftermarket with products and features that are in high demand by consumers, said Tom Malone, president of Audiovox Electronics Corporation. Starting the vehicle, opening the doors or opening the trunk from virtually any distance, or finding the car is a garage after a sporting event or a trip to the shopping center, now it is as easy as pressing a button or finger tap. The CarLink module + app can be easily downloaded to any iPhone, Android or Blackberry device virtually unlimited operating range. In addition to working on Audiovox-related products, the CarLink system is available on any competitive remote-boot product, provided the system has a negative external startup input so that it does not lose certain functionality. When used with Audiovox, CarLink provides two-way confirmation on your smartphone, as well as full status reports, real-time updates and notification alerts. For example, CarLink will notify you if the car door is open or if the system detects a breach of the vehicle door or impact sensor. With the CarLink app, you can add as many vehicles as you want to your account and easily navigate between vehicles in your device's settings. CarLink systems are now available to retail, online and merchants, for $249.00, which includes the first year of service for unlimited use in the United States. Each year thereafter, the service is expected to be $29.99. After installing and testing the hardware, subscribers activate their CarLink system and receive a link to the direct seat of the software on their mobile device. Even if users don't have a smartphone app, CarLink can still be accessed over the Internet, simply by logging www.voxcarlink.com any browser. Malone concluded many of our R&D focused on assimilating wireless technologies into our product line and levering mobile devices such as smartphones to provide consumers with products they not only want but need. I believe that this will be no different in 2011 and beyond, as we are planning a number of developments and new innovations for the mass market, as well as tailor-made solutions for many of our OEM partners.
