Getty Images How much can you tell about a person only from a postcode? According to Esri, a geographic information firm, the answer is a bit. The Esri website features a zip search tool that allows visitors to learn demographic information for any zip code in the United States. So while you already know the best states to look for a new home, now you can learn more about each particular neighborhood to find the right one for you. Here's how it works: Esri's Tapestry segmentation divides neighborhoods into 67 separate sections based on socioeconomic and demographic composition to provide a snapshot of why life is like everywhere. For example, Beverly Hills' famous 90210 zip code tapestry found that 73 percent of residents classed it as the highest level (aka they are super rich and have everything they want), 20 percent labeled as trendsetters (aka they are young professionals who care about the good things in life) and 8 percent in retirement years. Esri And while the site isn't brand new, the summer bustling season seems like the perfect time to take a deeper look at the neighborhoods (or neighbors) if you're thinking. Apart from that, the general knowledge of these five-digit figures is quite limited. We put it at the end of the addresses and then our mail magically reach the right place. But thanks to some cunning methods of detection (online research), we discovered that one of the most kept secrets is that we know all mail carriers: what postcodes really are and how they work. (Ok, so it's really no secret, but now there's something to talk about the postman.) Learn how you can help USPS right now. Why do we use a zip code? The entire practice of using postal codes is a relatively new system introduced on July 1, 1963. Prior to that, starting in 1943, the U.S. Postal Service used only a number of postal zones for major cities. If you were writing an address, this number would go after the city and before the state, and mail carriers would use it to sort mail more efficiently. What mail delivery looked like 100 years ago. What does each number in the zip code mean? In 1944, a postal worker named Robert Moon presented the idea of a new postal district system that would cover the entire country. The first issue will apply to a group of states on the east coast that start from scratch and end at nine on the west coast, and the second and third numbers will specify the departmental central facility (where the mail is processed and distributed) where the mail should go to that region. The U.S. Postal Service eventually adopted this plan with the addition of two numbers at the end to indicate the appropriate post office or postal zone, and thus, the District Improvement Plan Code or Zip code was born. Check out these other amazing facts about what number four means at the end of a postcode at the US Post Office.What? Nearly 20 years after the first zip codes were placed, the Postal Service made another change to the system: the four digits that came after your zip code. This covers any post office stand for a specific area. The sixth and seventh numbers refer to a distribution sector that can be a group of streets, a large building or another small geographic area. The last two stand for a delivery segment, such as the floor of an office building or one side of a street. Although the U.S. Postal Service says that the appropriate credit for the creation of the postcode goes to a committee of people, our addresses would look quite different if Moon were not numerically inspired. If you don't know that, you will definitely not know that these 23 secrets will not tell you in the mail carrier. Juanmonino/Getty Images, like most countries and regions rd.com peterspiro/Getty Images, are numerous codes, such as Israeli zip, or mail. Israeli postcodes consist of a series of numerical digits that represent the specific region and city of a particular address. Postal services use code to quickly route mail to the intended recipient. Postcodes in Israel follow a specific pattern that begins in the northern region of the state, and the numbers for each additional area along this path gradually increase. Israel's postcode system, with one exception, follows the same type of enumeration seen in other countries. Traditionally following a five-figure system, in 2013 Israel switched to a seven-figure system instead. While initially making postcodes more confusing, the idea behind the change was to open up the possibility for more addresses. Under the old five-digit system, the postal service was limited to only 100,000 possible codes. But since this change, 10 million unique zip codes are now possible. With a growing population of almost eight million, the seven-digit zip code system was a much-needed change to the addressing system. To find the zip code for a specific region or city, the Israeli Post website provides a search tool. Experience poor or no mail delivery due to poorly equipped postal infrastructure, organisation and reforms in many areas in Israel, and a lack of staff following budget cuts. Residents of some Israeli cities are raised complaints that late or non-existing deliveries are exacerbated by the closure of post office and mailboxes. The Israeli government has approved the partial privatisation of the Israel Postal Company, among other state-owned enterprises, through the sale of shares on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange. The Israeli government holds a majority stake in the Israel Postal service after the company is privatized. Yay, yay, my best friend Marcia is back in town after 30 years. As we all know from John Donne, he lived on an island no one knew about. And as we all know from life experience, no woman is an island. Especially an assigned girl. Still, I tried to be. I'm a good designer of boundaries. I'm closely protecting Silence and Solitude, my other two best friends. I'm a woman who needs as much alone time as food or oxygen. I built my life on my pre-existing condition. My mother-centered/concentric life doesn't allow me to be completely alone. And I'm stuck with friends, parsimoniously, parceled out. We talk, we go, we do it, we throw the beer back, and sometimes we sting. Marcia's back in the business means a new clubhouse and a lot of new laughs. And he likes his loneliness. With Marcia, right postcode, I have insurance alone there won't be much time alone: gateway medicine My sees are stable now. I have my mother's house, and Marcia's in the west, so I'm in the center.
