

Thornton school of music audition

Many students learn a kind of musical instrument in primary school. Some go through high school, and some even plan to continue students, however, music is not just something they want to continue studying, but the only thing they want to focus on college. If you are one of those students who wants to go to music school, then this article is for you. We will discuss what kind of experience you can expect at the best music schools in the USA (for students). What is a music school? At college or university level there are music schools in various forms. The most specialized of these is the Music Conservatory. Our list of the best music schools consists mainly of a) conservatories, which are part of larger institutions, and b) independent conservatory student, you take part in music classes almost exclusively. You may also have some required liberal art core classes, but the expectation at a conservatory is that the vast majority (at least 95%) Music lessons, studio lessons, performing, practicing and composing (depending on the major) are dedicated to their time. Students at music academies usually have a Bachelor of Music (BM) degree, although some conservatories can offer Bachelor of Musical Arts or Bachelor of Fine Arts in Music. In addition, if the conservatory is affiliated with a larger university or college, you may be able to get a Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor o conservatory and the non-musical bachelor program of your choice and be accepted to both to take part in both classes; at other schools, you can apply to the regular university and then take courses in the conservatory or vice versa. Dual courses usually graduate students with a Bachelor of Music and a Bachelor of Arts (either in music or other unrelated fields), although there are other pairings (e.B BM/Bachelor of Science or BA/Master of Music). Occasionally you can take this dual degree in the same four years. At many conservatories, it is also possible to obtain a bachelor's certificate or an artist's diploma instead of a to receive. Bachelor's degree programs are usually offered only with high performance (although you can occasionally run in a composition bachelor's degree) and are often limited to students who already have a Graduated from another subject, but have decided to return to school to study music. These programs do not have the same requirements or academic focus as other types of music bachelor degrees. Visiting a music conservatory is a good choice for students who are seriously considering pursuing a career in music and want their university experience to be primarily about music. A second type of music school is a university or university that has a good music program but does not offer a specialized bachelor's music degree (BM). Students of this type of music school graduate with a Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science in Music instead of a Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science in Music instead of a Bachelor of Music. (and even some high-profile universities) fall into this second category of music school. If you are a student who loves music but also wants to get a good non-musical education, schools with good music programs (rather than conservatories) are the way to go. That description suited me to a tee when I was in high school. I wanted to attend a school that had excellent academics, including a good music program, rather than a school that had an excellent music program and some good non-music classes. That's why I went to a liberal art college for lower grades and went only to a conservatory for my master's degree. The compromise when it comes to music schools is that most non-conservatories with good music programs do not have the same quality music programs as the best conservatories in the country. That's why Yale is the only school on this list, the only school on this list. difficult to give a definitive ranking as they compare. Take a look at this list of the different types of programs you can expect at a music (theory, music) Composition (including film music) Music technology/audio engineering Music education Music industry Music theatre (usually in partnership with a theatre study/drama program) Many of these courses can be further divided into different families of instruments (brass, woodwinds, strings), each with different tracks for different instruments. While it's great that music schools have such a wide range of programs, it also means that quality can be very different within the same school. Even assuming that a school is just as competent with every performance of a major, it is unlikely that it will be as strong in its performance majors as it is in its music industry program. There is no guarantee that a music school will be at the same quality level – it is very likely, for example, that a school could have a first-class music industry program, but a below-average music education for our list of the best music schools in the United States that provide students with the best music education for students overall. This assessment is based in part on rankings of student satisfaction and earnings and partly on the school's reputation as a music school. For our music school rankings, we have divided the school's reputation as a music school rankings of student satisfaction and earnings and partly on the school's reputation as a music school rankings. which to build a future music career. First, let's look at the best music programs in larger schools. Most of them are conservatories within a larger university or college environment. Next, we look at the best music only. These schools are all conservatories that are not connected to larger facilities, although cross-registration with other nonconservatories in the region may be possible. Finally, we will go through some honorable mention music schools. These are music schools in the other two categories, but are still noteworthy for various reasons, including affordability, general reputation of the institution to which the music school is affiliated, or promotion of interdisciplinary study. Picture above: the interdisciplinary study of music theory and why no earbuds remain in my ears. The best universities. Many schools on this list offer dual degrees, or at least a cross-registration between the music school and other bachelor's degrees that are part of the same overarching university. We have developed a rough overall ranking for these schools based on reputation, student satisfaction, affordability, breadth of offers and selectivity. However, it is important to remember that the difference in the actual quality of teaching between all schools is quite negligible and more dependent than school, so it is more a question of what you are studying. in welcher Umgebung man sein möchte, als alles andere. Although the IU Bloomington is a relatively large school, with a total of about 33,000 students, the Jacobs School of Music has only about 500 lower levels; it's still on the bigger side for a conservatory (it has about the same number of grad students as well), but it has a much more intimate feel than you'd expect to get from your average state university flagship school. As a student, you must apply to Indiana University, you have the advantage that you can cross at different schools of the IU and even acquire a dual degree in music and a non-musical area (BM/BA or BM/BS). In addition, Jacobs itself offers a much broader range of student fields than most other music schools, including everything from standard instrument and composition majors to an associate degree in string instrument technology. And for certain programs, Jacobs allows students to pursue dual music degrees, so that you can end up with a BM in composition and an Associate of Science in Audio Engineering and Sound Production, for example. About 270 lower-level and 310 graduates attend the Peabody Conservatory, which means that you have the opportunity not only to work with your students, but also with other students who are more advanced in their studies (and get an insight into life when you attend a graduate school for music). Peabody offers both Bachelor of Music degrees and performance certificates (a non-academic bachelor's degree) for students. To attend Peabody as a student, you only need to apply and be accepted for both Peabody and Johns Hopkins. As a rule, at least five years of dual studies at the Krieger School of Arts and Sciences or the Whiting School of Engineering are even more intensive than a regular conservatory training, you can cross-register with other bachelor programs at Hopkins without going to full-on dual degree. Yale is unique on this list of music school of Music), it only grants degrees to graduates. So if you want to study music at Yale University, you will only study in music (through the Department of Music) and get a BA in music, just like for an academic subject such as sociology or economics. Although yale does not have its own music school). Once you join Yale, you can opt for a certificate of achievement or an artist's degree at your BA; it's not quite the same as getting a BM, but it will show grad schools that you were devoted enough to the music to spend the time to get an extra diploma on your BA. Yale also has a new 5-year BA/MM (or BS/MM) program by the Yale School of Music for instrumental musicians only; There isn't much information about it yet, so we'll update when we get more information. #5: Eastman School of Music (University of Rochester, NY Acceptance rate: approx. 13% Students body size: 500 students (400 degree students) Tuition: 57,420 USD/year (with eastman reservation that almost 100% of students receive some form of merit scholarship) The Eastman School of Music is part of the University of Rochester, a selective private university in Rochester, NY. The process of applying separately to Thornton, you need to apply to USC and select Music Major in the application (as well as all required portfolio materials). Although you need to apply to USC (a total of about 19,000 sub-levels), Thornton Undergrads allows you to follow two different tracks: the BM track, which is essentially a conservatory degree, or the BA in Music-Track, which allows students to have a more liberal, art-oriented degree (which still includes a lot of music courses). Thornton's majors in music industry and music production are relatively unique among conservatories (which tend to be more performance- and theory-oriented), and the fact that Thornton is based in LA means that students in these majors can gain some hands-on experience outside the classroom. Students can attend the Thornton in the following areas: Major Department Concentration Degree Choral Music — BA Music Classical Guitar BA Performance Classical Guitar BA Performance Piano BM Music Jazz Studies (Instrument or Voice) BA Performance Jazz Studies (Instrument only) BM Music Vocal Arts BM Performance Violin, trumpet, trombone, tuba, percussion) BA Performance Winds & amp; Percussion (flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, saxophone, French horn, trumpet, trombone, tuba, drums) BM Performance Popular Music BM Composition — BM Music Music Production BM Music Industry — BS BA=Bachelor of Arts; BM=Bachelor of Arts; BM=Bachelor of Science. #7: Oberlin Conservatory of Music (Oberlin College) Venue: Oberlin, OH Acceptance rate: 25% Student body size: 580 students of the Conservatory (mostly lower grades) and 180 dual students Lessons: 55,976 - The Oberlin Conservatory of Music is part of Oberlin's commitment to providing all students with a solid foundation for the liberal arts, BM students must take 6-8 non-conservative courses as part of their studies. The Juilliard School is located on Manhattan's Upper West Side and is a world-famous conservatory with bachelor's programs in dance, theater and music. As one of the world's leading schools of instrumentalists and singers, Juilliard Alum's careers as a solo and chamber musician have begun and are members of top national orchestras (including the New York Philharmonic). Juilliard, one of the most difficult music schools in the United States, is the conservatory equivalent of Harvard or Stanford – highly selective, famous faculty, brand awareness, and alums who lead their field. As a student at Juilliard, you can choose whether you have either a bachelor's degree (almost entirely performance-oriented) or a Bachelor of Music (includes more class work and slightly less focus on your primary instrument). You can also apply as one of the 10-12 students each year who can cross-register for courses at Barnard College or Columbia University. Juilliard also offers a joint five-year Bachelor/MM degree in conjunction with Barnard or Columbia who is registered with Juilliard for at least two years before applying. Curtis is extremely hard to get, but when I spoke to Admissions, I was told that you can always apply if you are rejected, and that there are indeed many students at Curtis who have not come for the first time. The main reason for Curtis' exclusivity is his free study policy. All students will not be prevented from visiting Curtis because of the entrance fee. This policy has led to the than or harder to get than Juilliard and the quality of students received is extremely high. Curtis is almost exclusively a primary school; The exception is graduate singing studies, which usually has 12-15 students per year. That Curtis is so under-graded means that all your classes are taught by professors (rather than having some taught by TAs), which gives her a very different feeling than a school that is more evenly divided between lower grades and degrees students (or has a larger grade program than lower grades). Students admitted to the Bachelor's diploma program; To be included in the BM program, you must provide additional information such as your high school transcript. While you were a BM student with Curtis, you also have the opportunity to register at the University of Pennsylvania, a national university of the highest level, also in Philadelphia. While NEC has both jazz and classical side of the spectrum (unlike nearby Berklee, which tends to be jazz/contemporary music. In addition to a first-class conservatory program, NEC also offers an impressive range of cross-registration options for students who want to challenge themselves with non-musical academics. Like Berklee/BoCo, NEC is part of the Pro Arts Consortium, so NEC students can take courses at Boston Architectural College, Emerson College, Emerson College, Massachusetts College of Art and Design, or the School of the Museum. Students who are not satisfied with teaching only at Tufts can opt for a joint Tufts BA degree (in a non-musical area) or BS and NEC BM degrees. For students who are even more advanced in their music studies, NEC offers a joint AB/MM degree with Harvard. Like the Berklee/Harvard AB/MM, the NEC/Harvard Dual Degree is even more selective than the rest of NEC, with perhaps one or two students a year in order to progress. A few outstanding programs at SFCM are the Roots, Jazz, and American Music Major and the technology and applied composition and composition departments, which offers jazz education that goes beyond performance and jazz theory. Like Curtis, MSM has many more lower-level students than grad students, so the atmosphere is similar to that of a liberal art college (though compressed to less than 100 students per year). Like many conservatories that are not tied to larger institutions, MSM is primarily performance-oriented; Within this performance focus, however, there are a few programs that stand out. The first (which I discovered when I researched schools) is that you can get into jazz harmonica at the MSM. This is the only degree of this kind l've seen in primary schools everywhere, so if you're a harmonica virtuoso, MSM should be at the top of your list of schools to apply for. The second unusual course of study at MSM is the Bachelor of Music in Musical Theatre. Most conservatories, when they have theater programs. The only other school in this article that has a separate degree in musical theater is UMich's SMTD, which allows students to get a BFA in the musical theater. Apart from the core humanities classes offered under the MSM students can register in Barnard, but they don't have the same privileges in Columbia (unlike Juilliard, which has cross-enrollment programs with both schools). Students at CIM can choose either an artist's certificate (if they only want to focus on performance) or a Bachelor of Music. The only bachelor's programmes you can apply directly to CIM are composition or performance (on a specific instrument). However, once you visit CIM, you can also add a double major in music theory or eurythmy (a method to teach rhythm and music through physical exercise). The latter program is the only such program offered to students at any of the schools listed in this article, which CIM is a top choice for all students interested in learning more about Eurythmics. CIM students have cross-registration rights at nearby Case Western Reserve University, where they must take their mandatory non-musical electives and music history courses. As a CIM student, you can also take part in the dual Case Western/CIM course, which allows you to complete a B and a bachelor's degree from Case Western in a non-musical subject. Students at CIM can focus on one of the areas listed below: Major Department Concentration Degree Performance Classical Guitar BM, AC Performance Harp BM, AC Performance Cembalo BM, AC Performance Oboe BM, AC Performance Oboe BM, AC Performance Oboe BM, AC Performance Trombone 12 Honorable Mention US Music Schools The schools we listed in the previous two sections are what we consider to be the top 15 music schools for students in the U.S., but there are some other great music schools that, although they didn't create this list, should still be mentioned briefly. Some of these schools are distinguished by their interdisciplinary possibilities or for a degree that would normally only be accessible as a degree student, while others are known for their connection to highly selective national universities or lower-cost state schools. The first honorable mention school we is a school that has several music programs at various universities: New York, NY Acceptance Rates: Unknown for Steinhardt and Table but probably low; 30% for NYU as a whole student body size Steinhardt: 2600 sub-levels total table (music programs): 60 sub-levels at the Clive Davis Institute of Recorded Music, 50 in the Performance Studies Program Tuition Steinhardt: 51,828 USD (assuming an average study utilization) One of the leading private universities in the USA, New York University (NYU), has two bachelor colleges that allow students to study music. The Steinhardt School of Culture, Education, and Human Development may seem like an unlikely place to get a music degree, but that's where NYU's main music department is located. At Steinhardt, you can do a Bachelor of Music, just like at a conservatory, but you also get a strong liberal art education as part of your major. In addition to cross-registration with other NYU sub-level programs, students in Music Education or a BM/Master of Music in Music Technology. Here is a list of the various majors offered at NYU by Steinhardt: Major Concentration Degree Instrumental Performance Studies BM Music Performance Studies BM Studies BM Music Performance Studies BM Studies BM Studies BM Music Performance Studies BM Studi Performance Classical Voice BM Vocal Performance Music Theory and Composition — BM Music Business — BM Music Theory and Composition — BM Music Composition — BM Music Theory and Composition Contemporary Production and Song Writing BM Music Education — BM Music Education — BM Music Theory and Composition Contemporary Production and Song Writing BM Music, which offers bachelor's degrees in music, the Tisch School of the Arts. While Table is world famous as a conservatory for theatre, it has a few bachelor programs that are either musically oriented or can contain music. Through the Clive Davis Institute of Recorded Music, table students can receive a BFA in Recorded Music that focuses on various aspects of the music industry. Alternatively, students who want to study the intersection of music and other fields would do well to study table in a degree that is unique to students due to its diversity of approach and quality. A caution: NYU as a whole is a very selective school (with an acceptance rate of 21% overall), but table in particular is extremely difficult to reach (closer to Juilliard and SMTD in selective lyre than to the rest of NYU). Mannes School of Music (The New School) Location: New York, NY Acceptance rate: 35-60% (varies from program) Student body size: unknown; around 4,000 new schools are under-classified in total. Lessons: 48,760 USD The Mannes School of Music is part of the New School, which is located Union Square in Manhattan. Smaller and less competitive than the Manhattan School of Music, is Mannes still a great option if you want to study music at a New York conservatory. Since Mannes is part of the New School, students can also cross at other colleges in the New School. (Based on my conversation with Admissions, this usually ends at the Eugene Lang College of Liberal Arts or the Parsons School of Design.) Most of Mannes' bachelor's degree programs: conducting and theory. Most music schools don't allow bachelor's graduates to do a major in conducting, so if that's your main area of musical interest, Mannes is a good choice. Here is a brief overview of the bachelor music majors at Mannes: Program Degree Composition BM Orchestral Conducting BM Classical Guitar BM Harpsichord BM Theory BM Orchestra Instruments (Brass, Woodwinds, Percussion, Strings) BM Piano BM Voice BM=Bachelor of Music. California Institute of the Arts Location: Santa Clarita, CA Acceptance rate: unknown; about 30% for CalArts under-engraved total student body size: 220 Undergrads Lessons: 50,850 USD The Herb Alpert School of Music is one of several programs at the California Institute of the Arts (CalArts). This is different from the nearby Herb Alpert School of Music at UCLA, so make sure you don't confuse the two schools. CalArts' music program is remarkable because instead of getting a Bachelor of Fine Arts in Music. This award reflects the fact that the music education you receive at CalArts will be less what you would get at a traditional music conservatory than more an interdisciplinary experience. The interdisciplinary programs of CalArts and NYU are comparable, but the schools have very different academic environments and cultures. NYU is located in the Northeast in the Northeast in the heart of the most populous city in the United States, while CalArts is located in a southern California suburb. These cultural and geographical differences also mean that even nominally similar programmes are structured differently at the two schools (e.B. film evaluation), with different extracurricular possibilities. Here is a list of bachelor's degrees at CalArts' Herb Alpert School of Music: Program Degree Composition and Experimental Sound Practices BFA InstrumentalArts (wind, drums, guitar, harp, piano, strings) BFA Jazz BFA Music Technology BFA Performer-Composer BFA VoiceArts BFA World Music Performental Pop BFA BFA on request for student body size admissions: 110 lower grades Tuition and fees: 13,000 USD In downtown LA, Colburn School is a music school that offers everything from music lessons to graduate studies. All courses in Colburn are offered through the relatively new Colburn only offers performance majors. Because Colburn is so small, it depends on whether or not they can apply in a given year whether or not the teachers of your instrument have room for new students in their studios. Although the Colburn Conservatory Program is less than 20 years old and is only a performance major, we have added it to this list because it has an extremely remarkable (and laudable) function: free tuition for all eligible students and scholarships that cover the cost of housing and boarding on campus. With Curtis, Colburn is one of the most affordable music schools in the United States. Below is a table with the latest list of degrees with openings at Colburn: Program Degree Bassoon BM, PD Clarinet BM, PD Double Bass BM, PD Flute BM, PD Horn BM, PD Viola BM, PD Pictured above: conductor, solo cellist, third chair cellist, third chair cellist secretLy Concord All Star-clad foot. 4 Good music schools at public universities While there are a few public schools in our best music schools rankings (IU and UMich), most of the top music schools are remarkable music programs at public universities that provide students with a solid foundation for future graduate studies in music. They are particularly good choice for students living in the state because of the lower price tag (especially compared to some of the lower conservatories, which still cost students quite a penny). College of Music (University of North Texas) Location: Denton, TX Acceptance rate: unknown student body size: 4,000 sub-levels Tuition Texas Residents: 11,544 Texas Non-residents: 20,504 degrees: BM or BA in music; a double major with a non-musical major is possible, but due to the rigour of the music conclusion very difficult. In this section, however, we briefly wanted to mention four schools known for their academics with strong music programs. These music schools are not at the same level as the 15 ranked schools, but they are a good option for students who want to pursue non-music and music major at a high level. Northwestern—Bee School of Music Location: Evanston, IL Acceptance rate: about 10% (but there is a prescreening process, i.e. 10% of students who go through the prescreening process) Student body size: approx. 400 students Lessons: 54,120 degree at Northwestern. Vanderbilt- Blair School of Music Location: Nashville, TN Acceptance rate: approx. 20% (depending on major) Student body size: 200 Students Tuition: 50,800 US dollars Degree: BM, Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree, or 3+2 Bachelor of Musical Arts, 5-year BM/Master of Education dual degree 120 Students Tuition and Fees: 49,112 USD Grade: BM; can cross-register for non-musical Rice classes. Carnegie Mellon – School of Music Location: Pittsburgh, PA Acceptance rate: unknown; 16,700 Carnegie Mellon undergraduate total tuition: 55,816 ..... want to attend. Tip 1: Study the programs at the school Whether you want to study a particular instrument or learn how to do audio engineering and recording, you need to make sure that the school you are applying actually offers classes and teachers who specialize in your areas of interest. If you take studio lessons as part of your music studies, you should also look up the teachers and see what you can learn about their teaching styles and philosophies. This can be anything from searching for their appearances online to actually reach out to them and ask if you can chat. Getting to know how the teachers are is helpful for any school, but it is especially important at a conservatory where the only thing you will do is music. If you don't like your teacher or the school's philosophy and environment, you'll be miserable as well as wasting your money and time. This research also applies to the knowledge of what the deadlines and pre-screening audition processes are for the schools that interest you. Most music schools have regular decision-making deadlines at the beginning of December, with some schools need pre-screening materials as early as September or October. If you're considering applying to a music school, make sure you've checked the requirements for audition/prescreening by the start of the summer before your senior year so you're not on guard in September. Tip 2: Apply only to conservatories if you only want to study music Our second tip is not to apply to conservatories unless you are sure that the only thing you want to study is music (or if you have other subjects where you want to school plan focuses on academic subjects such as mathematics, history, science and literature/language. Being thrown into an environment where they suddenly only make music and know that it's all you want to do. And for students with academic interests outside of music, attending a conservatory can feel so restrictive that it ultimately leads to them transmitting or even driving the music away for a while. As an anecdotal example of the dangers of going to a conservatory as a student, I always think of a high school friend of mine who sang, played guitar and piano and was very passionate about and performance interested. She received a guitar scholarship at the Berklee College of Music and decided to go there... just to discover in her first year there that she wanted to a small Art school, where she was able to complete both music and environmental studies. She is currently a singer/songwriter who regularly performs her own music at live shows. All of this means that just because you don't go to a conservatory (or stay in one) doesn't mean you can't make a career as a musician. Tip 3: Consider location When applying The third tip we have for prospective music school applicants is to think about where you want to go to school geographically. Obviously, the situation is something you want to consider for every college you apply to. For music schools, however, it is particularly important to take into account the location, as it resonates the kind of musical experiences you have during your studies. If you go to Oberlin, you'll be in a rural setting where there's not as much opportunity to get performance gigs or non-Oberlin music performance as it would be in a city (or even a suburban) school. However, if you are looking for an isolated school where you are not distracted by practicing or writing music, this might be ideal for you. If you go to school somewhere in New York. San Francisco or Boston, you have plenty of access to music outside your school and many more gig opportunities (without needing a car to get there!). While the cost of living in these cities (especially in Manhattan, where all NEW York music schools are in this article) is much higher than in most other places in the country, there are usually discount programs for students to experience culture. Of course, you can also run into more competition for gigs in cities, and find somewhere to practice that is available when you are can be nightmarishly difficult, so urban areas are not clearly the better choice for music school locations. Our best advice: Think carefully about what you want to receive from your music education, and then consider the school locations through this lens. Tip 4: Compare music school costs Our last tip when applying to music schools is to take the costs into account when deciding where to apply. An ongoing cultural joke is that there are tons of students who use their degrees as placemats or jobs that don't require a college degree. In the Avenue O-Song What Do I Do with a BA? is the general idea that you don't learn practical skills in college that actually help you get a job after graduation, and you'll be left with a whole debt that you're cannot pay. Going to music school is a little different because you theoretically learn things that apply to your post-school life, whether that's the general music to teach as a music educator or how to be a better performer and network so you get gigs and auditions. However, the fact remains that the probable entry salary of a student completing a lower-level music school is in most cases lower than the cost of teaching for one year, let alone for the entire four-plus years of the school. If you're looking at music schools, you should be very clear about the cost of teaching compared to what you expect from attending school. For many of the schools on the list, there is some brand recognition of the schools on the list, there is some brand recognition of the school name that can increase your chances of getting a job at all. However, it won't necessarily increase your chances of getting a job at all. Curtis are so incredibly competitive to get into - not only is the reputation and calibre of teaching there high, but free tuition means that students who are gifted but might otherwise be unable to afford to attend a music school can apply and start their careers with low or no debt after graduation. What do I hear? Is it the sound of a music student who doesn't start his life after college with crushing debt? Becoming a professional musician requires dedication, training and hard work to become a professional musician for the best music schools in the UNITED States. If you're sure that the only thing you want to do with the rest of your life is to be a musician, then you should apply for music school. What kind of music you want to study, what aspect of music you want to study and how intensively you want to study it, affect everything that schools that are known nationally, but you can see that there are other lesser-known music schools that better fit your future plans or have teachers with whom you really want to study. When they go to one of the best music schools in the country, they may give them a bit of name recognition and networking edge, but in the end your hard work and talent (in that order) is what will make you a successful musician no matter where you end up going to school. Music! It's pretty great. (Unofficial slogan for each music school) What's next? Not sure how to find out where to apply for school?
