Are you looking for something conspicuously underfoot? The type of floor you have can make a dramatic impression on a room and set the tone for the whole environment. But there is more to choose from for such a large and expansive element than just carpet or vinyl. Here are five ideas that can take a room from so-so to striking. If you need a little warmth and softness underfoot, look at cork. Cork is a floor of material with a number of distinctive features. It's a subtly spongy material with a unique feel that brings joy to your feet. (We're not talking about installing recycled corks from wine bottles.) This is ideal flooring for anyone with allergies because it resists mold and mildew. Cork also has a muted, natural look, similar to hardwood. Keep cork out of wet spaces, like bathrooms. A cork floor's ervocations are magnets for water that will make the material swell, warp, and deteriorate. Rubber floors aren't just for kids' spaces. It absorbs sound and its soft, pillowy feel makes it safely underfoot in rooms like bathrooms, kitchens, gyms, or anywhere where slipping is a risk. Rubber is usually available in bright solid and specked hues looks that are perfect for fun spaces. Rubber can be installed in skin or tile form. The floor is generally quite easy to lay down, the weight of the material keeps it in place so that no toxic adhesive is needed. To remove, simply lift the flooring material. For a sleek, sophisticated, stylish, and easy-to-maintain flooring, consider mosaic glass tiles. Mosaic glass tile is not only for the bathroom-incorporating touches of mosaic flooring in hallway or patio flooring to add an elegant and ornamental touch to otherwise bland spaces. This high-end material is made of extra hard reinforced glass and is usually affed to a mesh mount support for ease of installation (just like mosaic backsplashes). The patterns available vary widely, as the glass can be printed in almost any color. The coolest floor option may already be underfoot. You can finish a concrete underfloor under finished floor. Taking concrete flooring from its raw condition by giving it a decorative, sleek, or shiny look. You can apply a number of techniques with concrete, including polishing, texture, and sour stains. An extra layer of concrete can also be added and mixed with color treatments or embedded with decorative objects. Although cheap, general and utitarian plywood is often thought of as just a sub-floor, it can also be used as your final flooring. By using it as your main layer, you will have an economical empty slate for a painted or lead floor. A richly stained plywood floor can rival the appearance of hardwood. Fully sealed with a polyurethane, a plywood floor can be easily cleaned by a damp mop. This is an ideal solution for a room that can no longer afford height of thicker flooring or for a high-traffic space. When using plywood as a finished floor, neatness counts. For example, first plan the installation by centering the boards in space. In addition, sand from as many imperfections as possible before staining or painting. Painting.
