Selection Sunday for the 2020 NCAA Tournament is on March 15 (about 4pm ET), while the games begin a few days later. The first four are on March 17 and 18 (which airs on TruTV), while the madness of round 1 starts on Thursday, March 19. The four networks that broadcast these games are: CBS, TBS, TNT and TruTV. The Sweet 16 games start on 26 September. The Final Four, held in Atlanta this year, starts on Saturday, April 4. The national title game is Monday, June 6, 2017. All these games are broadcast on TBS. UPDATED For 2021! Your 2021 March Madness Bracket template is here! Whether you're in charge of running your office pool, looking for a bracket to plan your bets, or just a truly organized fan of college basketball, we've put together an easy-to-use spreadsheet for tracking this year's tournament in Excel or Google Sheets. There are tons of downloadable Mars Madness brackets out there, so if you've come to us to download a copy, it's probably because you know that our sheets will contain cool features that others don't want (we're spreadsheet dependent). If, like us, you are interested in spreadsheets, keep reading below the links! If you just want to download the 2020 March Madness template, just jump to the bottom of the post. We've added both an Excel and Google Sheets template version for the 2020 Women's NCAA Division 1 Basketball Championship. Thanks to Angel for the request! What we added Ok, okay, we actually do not add anything for into March Madness bracket worksheet other than some simple Data Validation. The idea came to us quite late, so we were more focused on getting the template out for the beginning of the tournament. The template has a section at the bottom for the First Four games starting tomorrow! If you look at the main bracket, you will see the placeholders as VAN/WICH showing for the slots that are still undetermined. If you bet on these slots do not worry, the selection of selections at the bottom will automatically update that game for the second round (After Vanderbilt Wins!). Don't worry, if you just need the template for the second round, it works well for it too, just ignore (or even delete) the first round section at the bottom. As for the rest of the bracket, you can simply choose from a drop-down list from the two teams you had selected in the previous round. We thought this was a pretty basic idea, but we hadn't seen it in any of the other Mars Madness spreadsheet templates we'd been looking at, so we thought we'd make one. And it works exactly as you would expect. Save 2021 March Madness Picks When you (or your friends) have locked in the perfect bracket and need to send it to the pool organizer, the best thing to do is either print it or export it as PDF. This ensures that your file is not easily or accidentally edited, and you can claim your undisputed win prize. To save the file as a PDF in Google Sheets, simply go to the File menu and select Download As, and then select .pdf option. For best results, make sure you turn off the grid and away you go! Thank you and good luck with the NCAA bracket! If you need some help with your choices, check out the post from FiveThirtyEight on some computer-supported Mars Madness predictions. Updates February 27, 2020 We have cleared the bracket to get ready for the 2020 NCAA Tournament. We add the teams on March 15th after Election Sunday, but feel free to download the empty bracket now! 18 March 2019 The choices from yesterday are in! The Google sheet and the Excel version of the 2019 NCAA Bracket have been updated with this year's team. 20 February 2019 We have cleared the bracket to get ready for this year's team. We're going to fill out the teams come Selection Sunday, but feel free to take the empty brackets now! March 15, 2018 Updated men's bracket to include the results for the first four updated women's bracket with all selections 12. The Google sheet and the Excel version of the Men's NCAA Bracket have been updated with this year's team. Added a Total Points Tiebreaker spot for the championship match.
