Given the normal length of skirts, a pair of DocMartins are easily hidden and very comfortable for daytime walking. Slightly better are closed toe Birkenstocks or other natural leather shoes. Peasants can hide their shoes by wrapping their feet and calves with rags. This is supposed to be much beneficial for kung-fu slippers or other thin shoes approached: these will leave you in pain. Once you decide to buy specific shoes for faire, you will find that there are two basic possibilities: low shoes and loacas of varying height. To be historically accurate, you want to wear low shoes. As beautiful as high boots, Cavalier's style is better suited to the mid-1600s Stuart period and in any case the peasants don't waste money covering their calves in the skin! But for better or for worse, the appearance of loafers is the accepted norm and you won't win any friends pointing out inaccuracies in their new $500 shoes. For an obsession with shoes, take a look at The History of Shoe Fashion by Eunice Wilson. For more information, see Accurate 16th C low boots, take a look at the deals with Pilgrim Shoes and Plantagenet Shoes. You can also modify the modern shoes in the period of correct shoes. Under low boots you will wear knitted snakes or wool stockings (yes, even you men - Elizabethan were very masculine phosphates). Loacas are custom-made to match the user's foot, which means that in addition to being acceptable faire shoes, they are very comfortable. While visually similar, prices seem to vary greatly depending on the manufacturer. The base starting price is ~$250US. Good loacas should last for many years, requiring only the occasional new sole (~$25). [My power soles lasted about 8 faire seasons, and I resoled them (Schraeder Bootworks below) and are like new again. Ahhh.] For budget-minded, Minnetonka Loasins can't be beat, but don't expect more than 10 or 20 tough weekends of them: they're better suited to the occasional patron rather than a dedicated attendee. I wore Minnetonkas for two years before investing in real shoes and the difference is amazing. My feet NEVER hurt in the evening. I scoff at the rocks.
