The Discussion page can contain suggestions. Base Building is a core game mechanic of DayZ Standalone. Current functionality[edit | edit source] Starting with 1.0, players can construct bases or camps, ranging from simple loot stashes in underground stashes or barrels, to complex walled structures with Fences, Watchtowers, an electrical system and vehicles. Objects such as tents or electrical object systems can be placed using a ghost precision placement model. This allows you to precisely place objects in a specific location and rotation. In addition to building a camp from scratch, players also have rudimentary barricades in the form of lockpicks. Almost any working door on any existing structure in Chernarus can be locked in order to protect another person's ability to enter the building. This is only temporary though, as melee weapons can be used to break through the locked door. Given its current limitations, most people choose to use this ability as a distraction to create a surprise attack or to warn them when another player might try to enter the building they are currently occupying. Player camps can be built by a small variety of building pieces present in the game. These consist of tents, barrels, and base building pieces. You can find tents and barrels spawning naturally in the world, while you are required to hand-make pieces like walls and towers. Keep in mind that the construction of towers and fences can only be completed with planks, nails, wooden logs and sheet metal, although the kitthemselves must be made out ropes and short sticks. Just install TimeDestruction and Config_TimeDestruction.json with the one we have given. You can also use the excellent Breachingcharge mod that has built-in BaseBuildingPlus compatibility. I recommend using with Breachingcharge3in1 mod to add all classnames, if you need to.
