

☐

I'm not robot

reCAPTCHA

Continue

Washington state dmv kent wa

The main industries in Washington state include agriculture, timber, tourism, hydroelectric power, computer software, aircraft, and aluminum refining. Of these, agriculture is the most important industry, accounting for $9.5 billion in the state economy. Apples, dairy products, beef, wheat and potatoes are the top five agricultural products in Washington. Milk is the most common dairy product, accounting for about 15 percent of total agricultural receipts. The animals also provide beef, both from cattle and calves, as well as chicken eggs, and chicken meat. Apples are one of the largest crops grown in Washington, accounting for about 20 percent of the state's agricultural revenues. Washington produces more apples than any other state, accounting for 64 percent of the country's supply applies. Washington is also the largest producer of cherries, pears, asparagus, hops, mint and Kentucky bluegrass. Food processing also plays an important role in Washington's economy. It ranks third in the country for the processing of flour, coffee, potatoes, fish and meat, vegetables, fruit and dairy products. Washington is also known to be a leader in the transportation equipment industry, producing for the aeronautics and space industries. It is ranked second in the country for the production of computers and electronics, including computer chips, communications equipment, medical equipment and navigation tools. Washington is home to Boeing, Microsoft and other top companies in the industry. Long Beach Things to do beautiful beaches, outdoor recreation, and fun festivals are some of the great things to do in Long Beach. The Long Beach Boardwalk board is pretty much a typical boardwalk trail. The route has several larger observation decks, with picnic tables and benches. Bicycles are not allowed on the cliff itself, but are allowed on the parallel bike path (Discovery Trail). Do not expect major tourist attractions on the seafront itself, would be hotels or amusement park features, is not the type you would find in other famous tourist cities. The Discovery Trail Lewis and the Clark Discovery Trail is a paved path that leads through the dunes to several Clark places and its people ended up exploring them in the area (there are markers and sculptures). Even if you're not interested in Lewis and Clark, it's a gentle way to enjoy the ocean, the beach, and the dunes. You can enter the discovery trail at different entry points, you don't have to walk or bike everything. Beach driving beaches is a long-standing tradition in Washington, and this beach has some of the heaviest car traffic, so don't expect it to be completely clean as it would find in many other places. However, an entire section of the beach is closed to car traffic from 15 April until Labor Day. In the second week of August every year, Long Beach, Beach, organizes the Sand Castle Building. All about kites! Kite Flight is a popular activity in the area, with the International Kite Festival being the big event; takes place for a whole week every August. With thousands of kites flying, the view on the beach is very spectacular and amazing. People come up close and far for the festival every year, but if you don't get to the event, you can still check out the Kite Museum. If you're coming to the festival, plan. About 100,000 people attend, so be prepared for crowds, booked hotel rooms, and long restaurant lines. Visit the Cranberry Museum There is a beautiful little museum dedicated to the growth of blueberry farming in the area, methods, and tools used. The gift shop was nice, even though it was a little short of local products. There is a harvesting festival in October. Oh, if you want to bring Fido along on your visit, Long Beach is extremely dog-friendly! Editor's Note: The information contained on this page was compiled using real traveler reviews about things to do in Long Beach, Washington State. We manually choose everything we recommend and select items through tests and reviews. Some products are sent free to us with no incentive to provide a favorable review. We offer our impartial views and do not accept compensation for product review. All items are in stock and prices are correct at the time of publication. If you buy something through our links, we could earn a commission. Spokane Things to Do Visitors to Spokane enjoys a unique blend of nature, cultural attractions, and family fun. Nature and Family Fun Riverfront Park occupy 100 acres of land and water in the heart of spokane city centre on the expo '74 website. Visitors can walk along the river, feed the ducks, admire the sculptures or picnic on the grass, all free of charge. The park also has a number of paid attractions, which include a sky walk over Spokane Falls, Looff Carousel, an IMAX theatre, minigolf and skating. You can buy a punch ticket for rides or get a day pass, which includes almost everything. They also sell the passing season. Downstream of Riverfront Park, the Spokane River cascades down a series of falls. It creates a unique feature not found anywhere else in the U.S. Take away from everything for a time on the 37-mile long historical Centennial Trail. You can ride bikes, rollerblade, or walk on this well-maintained route. Some sections even allow riding. The Arts and Culture Look for street artwork on underground passages and on the sides of buildings while you walk around the center of Spokane. Murals cover most of the walls if the highway or pass over your head. You will find some interesting sculptures in Riverfront Park and the area just outside. Exhibits include a local astronaut who died in the space shuttle Columbia; a giant Japanese concrete flashlight; Sculptures Sculptures mining, healthcare, and Vietnam Vets; a mountain sheep; Bloomsday runners; and the Garbage Goat. If you like plants and flowers, don't miss Manito Park Gardens. Five separate gardens, including a rose garden, a Japanese garden, a lilac garden and a classic European Renaissance garden with symmetrical beds and the central fountain make up the 90-acre park established in 1904. The Northwest Museum of Arts and Culture has six galleries and an excellent Native American collection. Recent travel exhibits have ranged from Sue (dinosaur) to Star Wars. The Spokane Opera hosts the Symphony, concerts, musicals and even comedy performances. If you like live theatre, Spokane has everything from a children's theater to inB Performing Arts Center with Best of Broadway tour shows and music events. Editor's Note: The information contained on this page was compiled using real traveler comments about things to do in Spokane, Washington state. We manually choose everything we recommend and select items through tests and reviews. Some products are sent free to us with no incentive to provide a favorable review. We offer our impartial views and do not accept compensation for product review. All items are in stock and prices are correct at the time of publication. If you buy something through our links, we could earn a commission. Wenatchee Things to Do Wenatchee is one of the largest cities in Washington State and is known as the Apple Capital of the World. Travellers to the area will find more things to do during the visit. Riverfront There are several parks where visitors can spend the day. Riverfront Park offers a wonderful view of the Columbia River and the hills around the city, the Park is considered one of wenatchee's jewels. The park also offers a home for the Wenatchee Riverfront and Art Railway on Avenues Sculpture Garden. Joggers can hit the River Loop Trail, which runs through the park and along the river. Located at the southern end of a curve in the Columbia River, Walla Walla Point Park is located right on the River Loop Trail as well. On the 5th, it also offers some minor trails that run through the park. There is a pretty nice playground, a small bay that seems to encourage fishing, and a small beach. Gardens perched on a rock bace overlooking the Wenatchee Valley, Ohme Gardens are the culmination of sixty years of work by the Ohme family. Their efforts have gradually turned the once-barren hill into one of America's leading gardens that attract travelers from around the world. The gardens offer views of the river, while the mountains and forests surround the area. Editor's note: The information contained on this page was compiled using real traveler comments about things to do in We manually choose everything we recommend and select through tests and reviews. Some products are sent free to us with no incentive to provide a favorable review. We offer our impartial views and do not accept compensation for product review. All items are in stock and prices are correct at the time of publication. If you buy something through our links, we could earn a commission. Airfare $$Airfare $Norwegian Cruise Line Cruise $699 + ASAP Airfare Tickets $635+ Patricia Magafia Hotel & Lodging Deals State Park System in Washington has more than 200 parks that feature a pretty impressive range of landscape, environment, and recreation opportunities. Whether you want to go hiking or camping, stay in a cabin, go out on the water, sit on a beach, or have an outdoor birthday party or family reunion, state parks have it all. You can even delve into local history as several state parks have historic buildings from past military installations or schools. Note that state parks require a Discover Pass to park, which costs $30 for an annual permit and $10 for a day-to-day usability permit. Many parks, but not all, feature stations where you can buy a permit, or you can buy one online before you leave. 01 of 13 Beacon Rock State Park is located in the beautiful Columbia River Gorge. The main feature of this 4,458-acre park is the 848-foot Beacon Rock, which you can venture to the top of the route through the switchback and enjoy stellar views. The park is also perfect for hiking to waterfalls (there are tons and tons of waterfalls in the Gorge, including Multnomah Falls, which is not too far away), climbing, cycling, or horse riding. Portland is also nearby, so this park makes a great addition to the adventures of the city as well. 02 of 13 Cape Disappointment is just about everything except disappointing. Cape Disappointment has terrific hiking, campsites, cabins, yurts, and a boat launch, but what makes this park a standout is not only its excellent outdoor opportunities, but also the history of the grounds. Visitors will find not one, but two historic lighthouses perched on the bace with ocean views (part of the Pacific Cemetery due to the large number of shipwrecks), as well as the ruins of the former military bunkers that you can climb in and explore. Visitors can even stay in historic houses located right in the park. 03 of 13 Dash Point State Park is a well-rounded state park that has a significant advantage over many parks in the system - it is located just off I-5 in the Federal Way, which is a short drive from Seattle or Tacoma. The park has overnight camping, boating opportunities, and lots of hiking and trails cycling, but its shoreist is another part of what makes it a standout. Visit when the tide comes out, and you will find an extensive stretch of excellent sand for tidal-pooling and walking. Other parks near Seattle and Tacoma include Saltwater State Park just south of Lake Samamish State Park in Issaquah, and Millersylvania and Tolmie state parks near Olympia. 04 of 13 Deception Pass is the most visited state park in Washington as this park has everything-and everything amazingly gorgeous. The park comprises 3,854 acres, both a marine and a camping park, 77,000 metres of saltwater shore and 33,900 feet of freshwater shore divided between three lakes. To top everything off, visitors will find an incredibly large bridge that offers second views to none. That's how you might imagine, the recreational opportunities here are numerous. Go fishing or swim in Cranberry Lake, hike, watch whales from the hare throughout the park, go beachcombing, or stay overnight in one of the many campsites or even in a cabin you can only reach by kayak or other non-motorized boats. Continue with 5 out of 13 below. 5 of 13 If you like military history, Fort Casey is where to be. Built in the late 1800s, Fort Casey was a military facility designed for defense. By 1940, it was still used for training. As a result, today, visitors will find all sorts of remnants of the park's military past - a pair of rare disappearing weapons, mounted weapons and a battery that you can explore freely. There is also the Admiralty Head lighthouse to examine as well. Beyond its history, the park also has the opportunity to go by boat, fishing, hiking, and all sorts of other outdoor adventures. 06 of 13 What not to miss at Gingko Pietrified Forest State Park is probably obviously petrified wood. This 7,124-acre park has an interpretation center where you can see outdoor exhibits made of petrified wood, as well as the Interpretive Stone Trees Trail where you can see 20 petrified logs in their original settings. This park isn't just about exhibits. There are also 27,000 meters of shore on Lake Wanapun where you can go by boat, swimming, fishing, or otherwise enjoy the water. You can stay overnight in the nearby Wanapun Leisure Area. 07 of 13 Address Lake Wenatchee State Park, Washington 98826, USA If you want to enjoy some pure northwest goodness, Lake Wenatchee is an excellent choice. This alpine lake and the surrounding state park offer everything from 8km long lake boat rides to guided horse riding tours from an outfitter located right in the park. There are shallow places in the lake for young children to swim as well. In winter, you can give snow camping a try or go snowshoeing through miles of nearby trails. 08 of 13 Larrabee was Washington's first state park. Located close to Bellingham, the park has a bit of everything - boating, fishing, paddling, diving opportunities, tide to explore, hiking, camping, and more. You can also harvest shellfish on 8100 meters of shore here too. Larrabee State Park is located on the beautiful Chuckanut drive for 21 miles, making it a perfect stop if if driving on the complete scenic route. Continue with 9 out of 13 below. 09 out of 13 Most people probably think about going on a boat tour to watch the whale, but the fact is that you can watch the whale from the ground too. And Lime Kiln State Park is one of the best places to do just that. This small day-use park has fantastic opportunities to spot orcs, gray whales, marsupials, humpbacks, and minke whales between May and September. Visitors can also check exhibits about whales, hike or lighthouse tour. 10 of 13 Located on the quiet island of Orcas, Moran State Park is the perfect place to relax in nature. The park is home to five lakes for plenty of water recreation, has 38 miles of hiking trails and mountain biking trails, and has a stone tower perched up which you can climb and enjoy a fantastic view of the San Juan Islands. Moran State Park is also a great place for camp with several campsites. The Southend Campground is right on the water and the Northend Campsite is close to a swimming area. 11 of 13 More than 13,000 years ago, a series of massive Ice Age floods carved a path through the western United States. Today, Palouse Falls is one of the last waterfalls left along this path, and it's a sight to see. Falling over the picturesque walls of the canyon, waterfalls are popular for both painters and photographers. The park itself is not massive at just 94 acres. There are campsites and three views to see falls. 12 of 13 Zack Frank/500px/Getty Images Like Palouse Falls, Sun Lakes-Dry Falls is the remnants of Ice Age floods and features dramatic canyon scenery as a result. Unlike Palouse Falls, there is only one former waterfall here, but one that was at one time four times the size of Niagara Falls! The lakes remain, and visitors can go by boat and fish to enjoy the water. There are also plenty of places for hiking and exploring the history of this ancient landscape. Continue with 13 of 13 below. 13 of 13 SEASTOCK / Getty Images Wallace Falls is a 1,380-acre park hidden in Cascades filled with forests, lakes, and waterfalls. If you want to go camping and go hiking, it's hard to clet this park. Explore 12 miles of trails and don't miss Wallace Falls with three 265-foot levels with multiple views, allowing you to enjoy this impressive waterfall from any angle. If you have backpacking gear and secure a permit from park staff, you can branch out the opportunities of backpacking hiking here too. Too.