They gave birth to their daughter named Jesse Belle, but this relationship also ended in a divorce. DeathDenver died on October 12, 1997, when his experimental Long-EZ box, the n555JD aircraft registration number, crashed into Monterey Bay near Pacific Grove, California, while making a series of touch-and-go landings at nearby Monterey Peninsula Airport. Denver was the only passenger on the aircraft. Identification was not possible using dental records; only his fingerprints confirmed that the pilot was Denver. Multiple blunt force trauma as a result of the crash was named the official cause of death. Remarkably, by that time, John Denver had had over 2,700 hours of experience. He had pilot ratings for single-engine land and sea, multi-engined lands, gliders and instruments. He also had a type rating in his Learjet. He had recently purchased the Long-EZ aircraft, made by someone else from a kit, and had taken a half-hour checkout flight with the aircraft the day before he died. It was revealed, Denver was not legally allowed to fly at the time of the accident. In previous years, Denver had been arrested for drunk driving. In 1996, nearly a year before the accident, the Federal Aviation Administration learned that Denver had failed to maintain sobriety by not abstaining entirely from alcohol, and revoked its medical certification. However, it was stated that the accident was not affected by alcohol use, as an autopsy found no evidence of alcohol or other drugs in Denver's body.
