This week we're going to analog, reminding ourselves that we can live and live well without smartphones, and seeing what's worth preserving ahead of time we're all plugged in 24/7.1 remember the first digital camera l've ever used. It was the same as a salad bowl and stored pictures on a 3.5 plate. yes, it's the same as it used to be when we pushed into our computers. Each image - one disc can hold about 20 photos - was 0.3 megapixels. (It was Sony Mavica, OK nerds?) It was fun to play around, but I didn't imagine at the time that digital photography would ever surpass film. Everyone had a small point-and-shoot camera to the parties or excursions, and at some point, sometime between the minutes the roll was full, and years later, we'd mosey through the hour-long photo shop and get it developed for $5 or $6. Maybe a little more, if there's a little part of you you can share with your friends. Those days are long gone. And while film photography still has plenty of fans, it's harder to have the film processed in all tried and true spots than in drugstores. One-hour processing is a distant memory, even for dedicated photo shops. If you've ever wondered where to get your film developed and you don't have a specialty store near you, here's a rundown where you can go to have these scrolls processed and printed. Brick and Mortar RetailersCVSCVS offers 4x6 prints for 35mm film or disposable cameras. It takes seven to 10 working days to get them back after you get out. Prints cost $0.36 each, according to the place near me. Walgreens/Duane Reade/Rite AidThe Walgreens family charges $14.99 for a 24roll 35mm film, ready to pickup within 3-5 business days. You don't get negatives, but you get a CD that contains digital copies. Some stores photo labs also accept 110 movies, 127 movies, or single-use cameras, and send them for processing. WalmartWalmart continues to send the movie out for processing, but it's unclear even as staffers talked about how long it will take or how much it costs. That's the end of the list! Target and Sam's Club stopped processing the film in 2013, and Costco has been gradually ostracized by its photography departments for a few years. Online services Beyond the local camera shop, there are a lot of businesses that accept film throughout the country to be developed. Here's a handful to get you started. At DarkroomBased in California, The DarkroomBased i E-6 slide film. After processing the film, you can access a web gallery 3-4 days later and download your photos or order prints. Negatives are cut back and sleeved, and Pictures. The film's delivery to The Darkroom is free with a printable shipping label. Process One This Kansas photo store offers a cover of the film's multitude, from color and black and white options to slides. Process One doesn't offer free shipping, but you can choose to have your photos uploaded to Dropbox instead of getting a physical CD by mail. In most formats, you pay a developing fee per roll ($3.99 for color 35mm, $4.99 for 120 color development, and so on), as well as a per-print fee. The negatives always come back. Processing usually takes one day, but the delivery time depends on the shipping option you choose. It's worth noting: Process One offers a movie development sale every February. Mpix Wpix will send you a mailer with your 35mm roll or single-use camera. Within 24 hours of receipt, they develop and upload your photos online and send their negatives back from the Kansas facility. You can then order prints a la carte on the website. You pay 19 cents per share, and prints start at 19 cents. If you want a DVD with high resolution images, you can add one starting at $10. Shipping is free on orders over $35; anyway shipping starts at $3.95.Old School Photo LabUp in New Hampshire, Old School Photo Lab offers 35mm film processing starting at $12 plus $11 for prints. You just want digital memories? For $5, they upload your scans to a personal gallery after processing. Negatives get back to you and shipping is free either way. Old School also processes 120, 220, 110, 126 and 127 films and offers processing takes 3-7 working days, and the lead time takes up to 14 working days for other varieties. Meridian ProGuess where is Meridian Pro based? Kansas! Pricing starts at $10 to develop and you're late for 35mm or 120 movies, and it's free to download your files (get a CD for just a dollar more). The negatives get mailed back; 4x6 prints for $4. Service time usually arrives at your Meridian Pro movie in three days.
