UPDATE: Police reports are generally reliable - if you can't trust a reliable cop, - but it seems the Miami Beach PD may have exaggerated Justin Bieber's activities last week, and he probably didn't race at all. But our point is that it means when it comes to running a vehicle after consuming alcohol or drugs, and Bieber thinks you need to learn how to drive. And we will still be happy to teach him. Dear Justin, it has come to our attention from the cars and drivers you recently caught racing a Lamborghini Gallardo Spider and arrested as a drunk driver, driving on an expired license, and resistance to arrest. You've been in vehicle problems before, chrome Fisker sucks the crap out of this hat tearing through this wonderful gated community at warp speed in karma, the Batman logo Cadillac CTS-V Coupe, and other aesthetic distorted cars you own. It's not the so-called races that bother us the most - by themselves, these acts were the worst dangerous and deadly, even at 60 mph that you had travelled The police stopped you – it is true that you were known to be high drunk while doing so. While drag racing on residential streets shows terrible disrespect for property and the lives of others, so, police say, while under the influence of marijuana, alcohol, prescription drugs have a reputation for irresponsible behavior in the entirely new sty. So we're proposing a challenge: a race against the chosen road course on a date that doesn't conflict with pending commitments with the Florida justice system. You need to learn respect for the lives and property of your fellow citizens and respect for the features of the cars you own.
