Jeff Dunn / WGBH Allan Katz (left) rates a crazy quilt from the 1880s at seattle's Antiques Roadshow broadcast on May 27. Jeff Dunn / WGBH Posted Friday, June 7, 2013 12:37 pm Antiques Roadshow has been on PBS since the late 1990s. It is a show that travels throughout the country throughout the summer, with the antiques of the attendees and the assessment of these articles. This will be the show's first trip to Jacksonville, but Antiques Roadshow has been to Florida five times before. Executive producer Marsha Bemko said they wanted to go to a city they had never been to before, and there aren't many places they can go for the first time. More than 15,000 people signed up to attend the show, but 3,000 were selected at random and given a couple of tickets. If you have requested a ticket online before the deadline, on April 8th you can use Ticket Checker to check the status of the ticket. The event starts at 8 .m., and tickets will be accepted depending on the time of their tickets. The last hour of entry is at 17.m., but the event will not end until all items have been appraised. Each attendee can bring two items and must bring at least one. There are 20 categories in which attendee items will be placed and then combined with an appraiser. Ratings can be suspense and surprising, as usually items are worth more or less than originally thought to be. We know there will be treasures there, and we want to go get them. And we know that more than 15,000 people want to show us their treasures, Bemko said. Three episodes will be created from the visit of Jacksonville, plus an episode Junk in the Trunk, which will air in the spring TV season starting in January. Bemko suggested subscribing to her newsletter about when episodes will appear. The show will also record a five-minute segment on Norman Sudios on June 7 called Roadshow's Most Wanted. In the 1920s, Richard Norman, the founder of the studios, made a series of silent adventure films that broke the racial barrier in the film industry by including African-American actors in positive, non-stereotypical roles. The studio is asking people for copies of any of Richard Norman's films, especially The Wrecker. xSorry to interruptCSS Error Audiences never tires of seeing the antique valuations provided by the dear antiques expert team of the Antiques Roadshow. It will be the whole event, said Michelle Jones, communications director for Nashville Public Television. The response has been amazing. He said about 70 experts covering 23 specialties will carry out appraisals. Why Cheekwood? Nashville is one of five stops on the 2020 production tour. Officials said with the show's recent focus on distinctive historical sites (including Churchill Downs in Louisville; Hotel Del Coronado in San Diego; and Philbrook Museum of Art in Tulsa), Cheekwood was a natural location for the Nashville segments. Holding events at properties like Cheekwood provides an enriching experience for our customers and an impressive setting for the show, executive producer Marsha Bemko said in a press release. Our cameras keep the property, capturing ratings with the action of the event as a backdrop and where possible, taking our 'backstage' audience to places the public is not allowed or may miss seeing. Produced by WGBH Boston, Antiques Roadshow is in its 25th season. It is watched by up to 8 million viewers each week. It airs locally at 7.m. in NPT. ► More from Ms. Cheap: Sign up for my weekly newsletterThe popular show was recorded in Nashville only once before, at the old Convention Center in 1997. This time, the team will record three episodes for inclusion in the 2021 season. Cheekwood president and CEO, Jane MacLeod, said: Cheekwood is thrilled to host the Antiques Roadshow and excited to see this venerable institution receive national exposure.
