Bob lazar s4 video

Powered by Reelgood When it comes to the ever-controversial Bob Lazarus, there is a lot to unpack. The arrival of indie documentary Bob Lazar: Area 51 and Flying Saucers on Netflix has sparked huge interest in the alleged former scientist in Area 51. Among Lazarus's many claims is that he worked in the Area 51 of the S4 area, specifically in a department that is tasked with reverse engineering foreign craft propulsion technology. The documentary, directed by Jeremy Kenyon Lockyer Corbell, gets into all of this, as well as the investigative reporting done in 1989, and the FBI raids that seem to still plague Lazarus today. But there's still a lot of content that the doctor doesn't get involved in, like all this bob business, running a brothel or everything going on at Skinwalker Ranch (to be fair, there's a whole other doc about it). And then there's the subject of Lazarus' UFO test footage, a video he apparently recorded while he was working at S4. Where's that tape? Is that the missing part of this UFO puzzle?! What about the video of Bob Lazarus' test flight? Lazar told the story to Joe Rogan on the host podcast. Bob Lazar recorded some UFO test flights. Okay, the longer gist involves an affair and a UFO-watching party-and it's amazing that he's just soothed all this from the documentary! S4, a branch of Area 51, which Lazar claimed to have worked with, monitored the personal lives of all of his people to keep them under control, and this included a lot of phone pressure. That's how officials learned that Lazarus's then-wife was cheating on him. Unsure what stress might have happened at home, S4 interrupted Lazarus's involvement without telling him what was going on with his wife. Unaware of his wife's inesteriness and convinced that after what he saw, S4 wouldn't let him go for another job, he took insurance in the form that he told a bunch of friends what his real performance was. Knowing all the schedules of test flights for the inconvenience, Lazar took his buds to the desert for three nights to watch the flying saucers around the sky. By night 3, they turned it into a tail party and explored the video camera. That's why they were eventually caught; Lazar says they're too carefree. That's when Lazarus was admitted, questioned and fired. And just twisting the knife, that's when S4 told Lazarus that his watches were shut down because they found out about his wife's affair. Lazar left Area 51 and then went to investigative journalist George Knapp with his story not too much later. Turns out Lazarus really didn't have much to worry about. S4 and Area 51 would really let him just get another job, even after breaking the primary rule on work at NLO (rule #1: Don't talk about working at the NLO). Where's Bob Lazarus' test? Video? Joe Rogan wants to know the answer to this, too! But first, Lazar lowers expectations that he's sitting on a bomb shot that's going to blow up a plot wide open: But remember, it's in the dark in the '80s with a big camcorder the size of a monster and you have a bright light jumping around, but yes, I mean, we made a video about it, but by today's standards, it's... The footage wasn't destroyed, though it seems they should be. Is S4 just busy with wall-to-wall Barney Fifies? Lazar says george knapp has them, and then director Jeremy Corbell says the footage of Lazarus's footage is in the documentary. Except... Not. Or, if the tape's in the doc, it's not as if it's like a recording that Lazar himself took only a few days or minutes to get kicked out of the S4. In fact, the whole story of his wife's affair and Lazarus throwing UFO parties in the desert isn't even on the list. However, the footage exists because this is not the first time Lazar has spoken about this incident. Watch this: This quick clip from an old documentary (it's certainly some reality from the 1990s X-Files) runs through Lazarus's story of showing off EVIL to friends, though he doesn't mention his wife's affair. It includes the video itself, and that's... That's exactly what Lazar Told Rogan. It's a bright light jumping around. Does all this make Lazarus's story more or less likely? When he heard that Lazar took responsibility for creating a bunch of eye witnesses to confirm his story in 1989, that's probably likely, but then none of these people are represented in a doc or even called by name in Rogan's interview. The video exists and you can find it after some digging, but it's unspectacular, as Lazar said. But the hardest thing is to believe that a government agency so determined to keep it secret would be to eavesdrop on every phone in the eyes, and then turn a blind eye to one employee changing top secret flight tests into entertainment! The mystery surrounding Bob Lazarus is still growing. From the back of the headlines: Bob Lazar decomposition the secrecy surrounding the most sensitive government operations located in an area known as S4 area 51 in the Nevada air district. Lazar took full account of the spacecraft hidden by the government with the S4, as well as details of the propulsion and mode of operation. As the chief physicist on the Galileo Lazar project, he reveals what the government has known and hidden for decades. I answered some questions in detail. How is it possible to travel long distances of space without overtaking the speed of light? How do you create a gravitational field? What is the power source for interstellar travel? Lazarus' tape... describes and instructs the components and capabilities of an extraterrestrial vehicle used for interstellar journeys; gravitational drive. The disc that Lazar was working on, nicknamed the Sport Model, was one of nine different discs that were engineered back on a secret U.S. S4 assembly in the Nellis Air Force area in the Groom Lake area of central Nevada. With each passing day, that seems less true. I know what you're thinking: Is this idiot really dedicating a column to controversial UFO whistleblowers during a global pandemic? Should I stop reading this tinfoil claptrap now and spend the next few minutes on something more productive? Answer: 1. Yes. 2. Probably.OK. For everyone who's still here, why is Bob Lazar in my mind? Because I've just read the New York Times story - No Longer in Shadows, the Pentagon's U.F.O. Unit Will Make Some Findings Public - that involves a buried rudget about how astrophysicist and Pentagon contractor Eric W. Davis gave a confidential briefing to government officials in March about acquired off-world vehicles that aren't made on this land. Know. It's crazy. If you've ever watched the X-Files, the U.S. government has made 180 on EVIL. For nearly a century, information is collected through secret programs — Project Mogul, Project Sign, Project Grudge, Project Blue The Ozma project — had one main principle: the denial of the cover. The goal was to investigate UFOs. The outcome was official excuses. Inseparable were weather balloons or street lamps or migrish birds. These were illusions that were hinged by the natural world. These were fantasies of a manily imagination. They weren't real. All that has changed dramatically, starting with the 2017 New York blockbuster, which revealed the existence of an advanced airspace threat identification program created a decade earlier to analyze unexplained phenomena. The Navy has since publicly verified three videos showing unidentified aircraft violating aerodynamics laws. Looks like there's more. What was once a matter for supermarket tabloids is now being taken seriously by politicians and scientists. Isn't it time that Bob Lazar in the court of public opinion has a second hearing? In 1989, a man put Area 51 on the pop-cultural map when, during an interview with investigative reporter in Las Vegas, George Knapp, he made allegations that he would send Fox Mulder on to the couch for fainting. Lazar said he worked at a secret S-4 military base near Lake Papoose, where it was his job to reverse engineer the crash of foreign flying saucers. It's like hearing someone say he's taken care of the Loch nes monster's dental care. I'm sorry, huh? I remember Bob smoking crack from the Bunsen burner. But here's the thing: 30 years later, nothing Lazar said was proven. Nothing.Oh, I know that skeptics want to discredit him on the basis of a make-up charge that he forged his education or a previous job at Los Alamos National Laboratory. But is it? Knapp visited the lab with Lazarus many moons ago and was granted access without showing credentials. The security guard recognized Lazarus, who gave Knapp a guided tour while waving to his former colleagues waving back. I can tell you right now, if I go to the Globe and Mail and start waving at people, I'm going to be attacked and escorted out by security. You can't play in a bar. So if Lazarus really worked in Los Alamos - which officially has no information about him - why would she question his claims? There are also no records of Lazarus's birth. Does that mean it doesn't exist? Then I'd go a few steps further and ask, Why would you doubt anything Lazar said about non-logical? In the footage, confirmed by the Navy this year, the spacecraft rotates and flies on its belly, exactly as Lazar described it in the 1980s. When he first talked about Element 115 as a possible source of energy for an antigravity drive, it did not exist on the periodic table. Now, yes. Isn't that a strange coincidence? What about his sketches, which could now be plans for EVIL? As far as I know, Bob Lazar was avenged every step of the way. And you know what? World He's an apology. But if you google Lazarus, they're sucking you into a black hole that shows you're a fraud, a liar, a conspiracy theorist and a UFO fraud. What he said in 1989 – we recovered to bring down extraterrestrial plates that defied everything we know about the universe – was a stick of dynamite to rational thought. But what he was saying at the time is now a subjuk with an official record. Please read Lazarus's autobiography Dreamland, or see Netflix doc Bob Lazar: Area 51 & Flying Saucers, and tell me why you still think it's a deceptive kook. Spoiler warning: You can't do that. Lazarus never tried to gain from the whistling that ruined his career. He's not in any lucrative talking circles. He doesn't sell little Green men's t-shirts. It's about his business in the shadow of unfaithful and ridicule. 30 years later, he just wants to move on and change the subject. He wants room to breathe in the midst of the suffocation of the earth's doubt. Loading... Loading... Loading... Loading... Loading... But if, as reported this week, new UFO revelations come - and they include new insights into acquired meta-materials that are not from this world - isn't it time to set a record straight on our most famous UFO whistleblower? Isn't it time to land on this flying saucer of consent? Bob Lazarus is either a diabolical liar or some kind of hero. It can't be both. But what could be, now more than ever, is an invaluable tour guide to the unknown. Unknown.
