Greenville county school district covid

Photo: shutterstock.com You don't need children to understand that good public schools support the value of homes in their district. And while higher-quality schools typically come with higher property taxes, homeowners in such districts are eventually repaid by a higher selling price for homes. Getting paid back sounds great, but how much do we talk about it? New research from Realtor.com shows that 9% of buyers would pay 11 to 20% above the budget to enter a desirable school district. Separately, 17% said they would pay extra to be close enough for their children to go to and from school. Realtor.com found that 62% of buyers would pass a home bathroom if it meant getting to the right school district. 50% would allow easy access to shopping, while 44% would forgo space in the form of a bonus room. If the house you want to sell is in a coveted school district, do everything in your power to highlight this fact in all your real estate marketing materials. Many potential buyers are the parents of children who are currently in the school system, so be sure to get the word among neighbors and local friends. When you buy a house, use a search tool that allows you to filter by school district, because the district boundaries don't always match city, village, and city lines. After all, you can't expect your children to be assigned to attend the same school as the kids down the block or even next door. The U.S. Department of Education's National Center for Educational Statistics provides such an instrument, and Great Schools offers a similar tool. Once you've identified the right school district, sometimes you have to figure out which school you're assigned to. This can be done by calling the local school district. Many major school districts, including Los Angeles and New York counties, provide use the address of the principal to determine the assigned school. Determine.
