The film also includes Ryan Phillippe, Marisa Toomey, Josh Lucas, William H. Mackie, and Bryan Cranston. The story is adapted from the first of several novels involving Mickey Haller's character, who works from a driver's Lincoln City car to an office. Weller is hired to defend the son of a wealthy Los Angeles businessman in a raid case. Details of the crime bring up uncomfortable parallels with a former case, and Wheeler discovers that the two are intertwined. The film was released on March 18, 2011. In general, he received positive reviews and earned $87 million. Criminal defense attorney Mickey Haller's plan (Matthew McConaughey) operates around the city of Los Angeles, California, mostly from the back seat of his black Lincoln City car, driven by Earl (Laurence Mason). Most of Howler's career has been to defend diverse garden criminals, including a local cyclist club led by Eddie Vogel (Tris Adkins). A high-profile case comes the way he comes and Hasler is hired to represent wealthy Rep. Louis Roulette (Ryan Phillippe), Playboy Beverly Hills and real estate mogul Mary Windsor (Francis Fisher). Roulette is accused of brutally beating Regina Campo (Margarita Levina). Roulette insists the innocent victim is a launcher. Haveler and his investigator Frank Levine (William H. Mackie) analyze the photographs and evidence, seeing it as similar to another Howler case that resulted in a life sentence for his client, Jesus Martinez (Michael Peña), for the murder of a woman, despite repeated announcements of his innocence. Howler's ex-wife, prosecutor Maggie McPherson (Marisa Toomey), has always loathes Howler on behalf of guilty clients, though they remain close. Howler wonders if he was wrong to persuade Martinez to plead guilty to preventing the death penalty. Weller visits Martinez, who gets agitated when Heler shows him the roulette photo. Howler now believes Roulette is the killer in Martinez's case, but, bound by the confidentiality laws of the client's attorney, is unable to reveal what he knows. Roulette enters Howler's house and non-wheel confesses to committing the murder for which Martinez was convicted. He makes codified threats to Howler's ex-wife and their daughter. After Leaving, Levin found a voicemail claiming to have found Martinez's out-of-jail ticket. Howler discovers that his father's late Colt Woodsman .22 is missing from its box, the same caliber gun that killed Levine. Detective Lankford (Bryan Cranston), who doesn't like Howler, discovers the record of the gun and suspects Howler's involvement in Levine's murder. Howler is confident that Roulette stole the gun when he entered Howler's house, legally obliged to defend his client, guilty or not, to ruthlessly investigate Campo and the discredits. In the eyes of the jury. Weller then launches a well-known prison informant with information about the previous murder. When the informant testifies, Ler discredits him, and the state attorney (Josh Lucas) can only move to dismiss all charges. Roulette is released, but police arrest him immediately after the previous murder, according to the testimony of The Informer. Weller obtains a punch from Earl for protection. Roulette is released due to a lack of evidence and plans to kill Howler's ex-wife and daughter. Howler waits at Maggie's house when roulette arrives. Halter vows that he won't stop until Martinez is released, and Roulette is convicted of his crime; Roulette mocks Howler for not protecting his family full time. Cyclists that Haveler previously represented suddenly arrive and brutally beat Roulet. Maggie discovers that Levine found a parking ticket issued to Roulette near the home of a previous murder victim. This strong evidence against Roulette awaits him in the murder trial and will support Martinez's innocence. Arriving at home, Adler discovers Roulette's mother, Mary Windsor, waiting inside. He shoots her with coil Woodsman and confesses to murdering Levine to protect her son. When Mary moves on to Harler again, she subverts the gun obtained from Earl and fatally shoots him. Martinez is released and the district attorney will seek the death penalty against Roulette. As Wheeler rides off to his next case, he is drawn by Vogel and the cyclist gang, which is the next case he takes pro Bono in appreciating his help.
