[HD] DOWNLOAD: because this direct action version of Aladdin was first announced, it seems that certain people oppose it. While I also have sweet memories of seeing the original animated version in the theatre, I am at least willing to give this opportunity. I'm glad I did. First, people need to be aware of animated films and live action movies are two different things. Some of the things that work in the animation won't translate too well into direct action. The other thing to accept is, robin Williams's convincing lack of reassurance, not the way they will be able to replicate its uniqueness in taking Genie's character. Once you open your mind to the possibility that something can be 'different' but also 'good'; then you will have a more pleasant experience. That's what we get here: a movie that but at the same time new/different (and that's not a bad thing). From the outset, the film is quite different to what we expected when we were introduced to who told the story. Although it immediately proved to me what was going on, it wasn't a 'bad' addition. After sweeping the shots set to the song 'Arabia Night', we were introduced to a 'street rat' named Aladdin. While much fuss has been made about casting Genie, if Aladdin had misunderstood it, then the whole film would suffer. Thankfully, I can say that I almost instantly liked Mena Massoud in the role. He's funny, getting moving/charm, making for a possible 'thief' and his relationship with his pet monkey, Abu, is as good as I expected. Speaking of, although people think the CGI characters are severe a lot of the time, it must be made clear animal companions in this case all beautifully brought to life characters/fully realized. Ash is expressive, funny, and helpful (although sometimes getting them both into trouble). Not before long Aladdin discovered Princess Jasmine (a good actress Naomi Scott, who did a lot of character and should make most Jasmine fans proud), who disguised among the people. I fear that the film will rush through their first encounter, but is pleased with the amount of time devoted to them developing interest in each other. I can immediately tell that Jasmine's beloved character is in safe hands as described by Naomi Scott and that she has nice chemistry with Aladdin Massoud. Although not given much to do as Abu, Jasmine's loyal tiger companion, Figure, is another wonderful animal created with CGI, which I escort is not largely ignored. Jasmine's other loyal friend, handmade named Dalia, is actually a prominent character in the film. Nasim Pedrad has excellent comic time, like Naomi Scott, who is on full display in a fun scene where Aladdin comes to the palace and Jasmine tries to keep his cover. The 'missed' in the casting department is Marwan Kenzari as the villainous Jafar. While others have judged him based on trailers alone, I am willing to give him the opportunity to make a lack of nasty voices with what to expect at least a menacing performance. Unfortunately, he didn't have even that. There is nothing unforgettable about his portrayal (albeit near the end when he is given every chance of releasing in full villainous mode, he falls short). About the only 'positive' that I found about his character is his animal companion iago. Red bird not so as talkative as an animated version, but hedoesn't talk (and in a way more like a bird), get some funny lines here and there (I expect no less than Alan Tudyk to provide a voice). It is just disappointing that Jafar miscast, and hinge the 'weak link' in the film. What most people Wonder about Will Smith as Genie. I actually think he's pretty good here (and I find him preferring in this role than I have in any movie I've seen him in since maybe first Guy In Black). There were only one or two instances where I felt he was trying to emulate Robin Williams's version and it didn't quite work, but on the whole I felt he brought his own energy/style to Genie's character and it (mostly) worked. The most important thing is the friendship he formed with Aladdin. While Genie Smith may seem more snarky than you'd expect, when it comes to emotional beats, her performance hits a proper note (especially near the end). Speaking of notes, What about songs? you can ask. I'm pretty happy with them, there are just the right amounts and they don't feel very disturbing in any of the scenes they feature. Even the new song, 'Speechless', isn't too bad (although some people will no doubt complain). Massoud and Scott have a very nice singing voice and do the justice of their songs. I think. Did Smith also qualify with his main songs in the film (the final credit I could do without, though). I must also praise the clothes (Jasmine's all amazing, like Jasmine herself), the use of energetic colors is quite impressive and the overall look of the film feels like something new/different to what we see time and time again in the film (especially Disney). Things I forgot to mention: The Magic Carpet has as many 'characters' as the original (I particularly appreciate seeing how close friends Carpet and Abu became in the end), as well as the Sultan's head guard, Judge, given some depth. In conclusion, if you go to the theatre already don't like it/hate movies based on just trailers, then you'll probably leave the same way you enter: bitter and think things like It ruined my childhood! (statement of such garbage). Just trying to accept this is a different thing and hopefully you will enjoy it.
