push anything. Just show your form [7] [8] Laszewski returned to the professional competition in 2005, finishing second in the NPC in a highly controversial judging decision. Laszewski was initially encouraged by the possibility of winning the newly formed lightweight class and entering several Southern State amateur races. He sent in photos and entered the NPC tournament in 2005. Laszewski and her boyfriend noticed considerable attention to her physique, believing she would take first place. Laszewski confronted the judges behind the scenes, wanting answers as to why he was second behind Dena Westerfield. Laszewski was disappointed with the referees' paradoxical explanations, because they said his back was too defined and detailed to be well presented in a professional league, but not in an amateur pre-qualifying. Laszewski felt trapped in a catch-22 that his strong physique was more suitable for the professional league but could not enter the league without winning the amateurs. Nationals in Miami. [8] Professional since 2009, Laszewski was second in the 2012 Miss Olympia, putting her as a runner-up to Iris Kyle. It was her best performance at an IFBB professional event for her entire career, and she was considered a serious threat to reigning champion, Iris Kyle. In interviews, she said the reason she was able to improve her standing was to talk to judges and learn that her muscle mass had been judged negatively because of her female form reduction. Laszewski said he reduced the size of his back for the match by removing certain exercises from his workouts. She also admitted to not doing any cardio for 6 weeks before the race, a stark contrast to 2012 Bikini Olympia winner Natalia Melo, who raced 10–12 miles a day for her competition. [2] Her second-place finish at The 2012 Olympian will automatically enter her as one of five participants to qualify for Ms. Olympia in 2013, until September 27, 2013. In the wake of the 2012 Olympia, Laszewski categorized his current situation as close to the pinnacle, which could eventually drew the results of years of work. She told an interviewer that she was confident she could win the 2013 Olympian and Ms. International 2013. Laszewski was expected to take third place in the 2013 Miss International, behind Iris Kyle and Yaksani Oriken, who did so in 2013, According to Muscle Insider. In 2011, she gave a tour of her home to muscle development. [14] He is an official athlete sponsored by the Ironville Clothing Company, which is sold Sports. [15] Laszewski's personal training is a personal trainer who lives in Jupiter, Florida. [16] Some of his clients are: Mr. Bahamas 2011 Robert Harris, Southern States 1st Place winner Beth Wachter[18] photographer Blake Reagan, [19] and professional women's face participant Traci Pate. [20] She has an older sister who competes as a professional bodybuilder in the Natural Federation. [5] George Farah, who is also her boyfriend, served as her nutritionist and prepared her for many of her matches. Laszewski said tuesday BodyBuilding.com is scheduled to publish a coffee table book during Ms. Arnold's 2010 race. The book was reportedly a 4-year project for Laszewski and will contain 70 photos of him across the country, each with spiritual quotes. Laszewski stated her reason for creating the book was to educate readers about female bodybuilding in an artistic way.
