However, the genre of hard drama will not be overlooked, as he will headline a World War II spy thriller under Scarlet Sky. According to Deadline, Spider-Man star Tom Holland teamed up with former Sony Pictures boss Amy Pascal through his Pascal Pictures company to star in Beneath a Scarlet Sky, based on the 2017 fact-based novel of the same name by Mark Sullivan. Although still without a director or screenwriter, producers Pascal and Rachel O'Connor did early work on the adaptation, having just acquired the film rights to Mark Sullivan's novel, which was just released on May 1. Holland made headlines under Scarlet Sky as Pino Lella, an Italian teenager who would only about her life under the scourge of World War II; a confetti in which his country was thrown out because of mussolini's alliance of fascist leaders with Nazi Germany. That is, until the war claimed his family home and news of Nazi atrocities incited Pino to join the subway to help Jews escape over the Alps. However, with his conscription number immediately called, Pino's parents enlisted him as a German soldier, hoping to keep him out of battle. However, Pino, at the age of 18, will get hurt, anyway. The unfortunate incident sent him to another stint as Adolph Hitler's own personal chauffeur; a position that happens to be for his clandestine resistance efforts, because it makes him fly the proverbial... err, the spider on the wall that listens to the axis power elite. The story itself is the product of investigative journalism from Sullivan - a former Peace Corps volunteer in Africa - who dramatized Pino Lella's personal account in real life, most recently aged 91 and living Milan. Milan.
