This documentary really touches on the issue of identity, says Gaby Melindolph, director of community services and volunteers, stating: Over time, our society has created the identity of what boys and men should look like and act like. This particular identity does not allow individuality. This is documentary. It's a great opportunity for Brevard College students to start conversations about their identity and to think about the masks that they are wearing. The mask you live in is the second documentary to be shown by IWIL this year. Last semester, the group hosted Rising Girl, which focused on changing attitudes and organizing investments in girls' education and empowerment around the world. The mask you live in follows young boys and men in their struggle to stay true to themselves while navigating what the film designates as America's narrow definition of masculinity. The youngsters face social media pressures, peers and even adults in their lives, according to the film's website. Boys regularly have to deal with messages of encouraging them to disconnect from their feelings, undervalue credible friendships, protest and degrade women, and resolve conflicts through violence. According to the film, these gender stereotypes are connected by race, class and circumstance, creating a maze of identity issues young boys and men must move to become real men. Newsom wrote, directed and produced the award-winning 2011 documentary Miss Agency. As a result of that film's powerful influence, he launched The Representation Project, a nonprofit organization that uses film and media as a catalyst for cultural transformation. His second film, The Mask You Live in, had its world premiere at the 2015 Sundance Film Festival. The film has received praise for being thinking, being powerful and must-watch. 'Mask' is an important film for students to see because it tells the other side of the story, says Stephanie Hain, a member of the IWIL program and a student organizer in B.C., but we see it as a women's issue. Rape is not a matter of women. One in 10 men experience rape during their college studies. But it's not about gender. The issue of addressing the issue of institutionalized masculinity is cultural and what that means. In order to take steps to solve the culture around sexual violence, we need to look at the culture around gender.
