As seen on tv tortilla bowl

It's the biggest single television event of the year - a time when sports fans, casual fans and even non-fans gather, eat and celebrate the wonders of football. And between a pre-show, hours of advertising, a complex halftime event and a post-show event, they really play a football match. But there's one aspect of Super Bowl Sunday that tends to get less attention - and that's everything else on TV. Since the mid-'90s, the network has a tradition that has knocked over super bowl broadcasting rights. They usually show a particularly exciting episode of the popular series - often designed to appeal to fans and beginners both. In recent years, series such as Friends, The X-Files and The Office have aired since the game - and each has enjoyed a big increase in ratings. But other networks also continue to offer quality post-Super Bowl programming - after all, the program must continue. If you're looking for something to watch after the Super Bowl 50 wrap, here are five TV shows that should do the trick. 1. The Late Show with Stephen Colbert (CBS) Stephen Colbert | Source: CBS CBS is making history this year with a post-Super Bowl program. For the first time on the network, a talk show will air on The Late Show with Stephen Colbert. Since taking over from David Letterman in September, Colbert has shown himself to be an entertaining and often thoughtful late-night presenter. But he often follows Jimmy Fallon when it comes to drawing viewers. So this is a strategic choice for CBS - a chance to grab Colbert's target audience and remind them how great he is. Colbert's guests during the hour-long episode will include Key & Peele, Suicide Squad's Margot Robbie, SNL alumni Tina Fey and Will Ferrell, and FOX News anchor Megyn Kelly. And probably a lot of jokes about what we saw during the game. There should be something for everyone in the post-Super Bowl issue of The Late Show. 2. Billions (Showtime) Source: Showtime This showtime's new Wall Street drama is steadily gaining fans. And unlike other networks that usually air again during and immediately after the Super Bowl, billions is brand new Sunday night. The series stars Paul Giamatti Chuck Rhoades, an American district attorney whose only mission is to bring down slippery hedge fund manager Bobby Axelrod (Damian Lewis). The fourth episode of Billions, Short Squeeze, airs at 10 p.m EST Showtime. 3. Puppy Bowl (Animal Planet) Source: Animal Planet If you still want a little football action after the Super Bowl 50 rows, Animal Planet has you covered. Of course, the game they play is a little warmer and fuzzier than what we'll witness when the Panthers and Broncos meet. Puppy Bowl is a long-standing tradition - both as an alternative to the game and as an enjoyable side it's exactly what it sounds like - puppies play football. And it's good for a few laughs - especially if you have to blow off steam after the inspiration for the game. The Puppy Bowl will air throughout Sunday night at Animal Planet. 4. Shark Tank (ABC) Source: ABC The ecstasy of victory, the pain of defeat. We witness it every year during the Super Bowl and every week on ABC's cutthroat reality series Shark Tank. The episode they're going to air after the game is a rerun. But with a combination of humor and competition, this series about investors pitching on the field to aspiring entrepreneurs could be the perfect night-time mystery for Super Bowl 50 viewers looking to overtake other deals. 5. The Walking Dead (AMC) Source: AMC Didn't See Enough Grit and Glory at Super Bowl 50? Here's the solution: Zombies. AMC is at the Walking Dead Marathon, which premiered on February 14, 2019, on Super Bowl Sunday. When the game is over, they'll be halfway through the second season of the series - but you can still tune in and catch up with your favorite character and kill. Hunt for killer offer for a 65-inch 4K TV so you can watch Super Bowl 2020 4K Ultra HD HDR? You got lucky — Walmart has downgraded the 65-inch LG UM6900 by $170. This sees high-resolution TV on sale for just $480, down from $650. Best of all, it is offered through the retailer's flexible 12-month payment plan for as little as $45 per month. With a crystal clear 4K Ultra HD display, LG's webOS smart software for one-click access to all leading sports streaming services including Sling TV, and multiform HDR (headliner HDR10) to draw details, better contrast and a more realistic color in the scene at hand, LG UM6900 has everything you need to make this Super Bowl party the best. These features are all handy when the big game also closes. WebOS smart software has more than just sports portals, and everything from Amazon Prime Video and Disney+ to Hulu and Netflix is supported. Most of these streaming services have a wide range of 4K HDR material, so HDR doesn't start gathering dust either. LG is a well-known hardware that lasts, so keep the 65-inch LG UM6900 investment. You can choose a cheaper route and choose a budget of 65-inch Sceptre U650CV-U for $370, which doesn't even include smart software, and it can break down after a month. LG, on the other hand, is as smart as Einstein and will certainly stand the time. You don't sell it? Here's what one customer said: We've had this TV for a week and so far we're very impressed. It arrived unscathed, was easy to set up and has many features that are excellent. Love the way you can change your picture for different modes and preview the change before deciding on the best effect. All features are easy to use without you being back and forth between screens. It's also a great picture. I can't beat it for the price. If you want something a little different, there are several fantastic 4K TVs on sale ahead of Super Bowl 2020, including the 43-inch LG UM6950DUB for $230, the 55-inch TCL 4-Series for $270, A 49-inch Samsung Q60R for $600, a 55-inch Sony X800G for $690, a 70-inch Vizio V-Series for $700, a 75-inch LG UM7970PUB for $950 and a 65-inch Samsung Q60R QLED for $1,000. Supplier recommendations 3/12 via amazon.comThethis As Seen on TV product may seem like a silly purchase, but people have gone crazy about it! The concept behind the Huggle hoodie is basically a blanket that you can use. Or a sweater where you can curl in. In other words, it is an oversized hoodie that provides the warmth of a cozy blanket. I love this because it's not a round blanket... it has sleeves so that the person can also work on it, says the reviewer. Another reviewer leaves a fun, albeit promising, assessment of why you might want to consider buying one yourself:The Ontel Huggle hoodie has quickly turned into my wife's favourite gift I've ever given her... More than his wedding ring, our house, or even our children. He loves her. I didn't know he'd keep it day and day. At just 115 pounds, the hoodie completely encased him, occasionally resembling a garden stain. Which is great for him because we live in Antarctica in the United States; That's Minnesota. At least he's happy... and warm. We then own three of them; of which I have my own. You may also like these instant tricks that make your home cozy.
