Amazon flex background check dui

For regular Amazon orders, you'll need a larger vehicle: a midsize four-door sedan or larger, an SUV, a van, or a pickup truck with a covered bed. How's the insurance? Amazon will provide insurance beyond your normal coverage.* Theirs is a commercial policy, and includes contingent extensive and collision coverage. It covers you while you ship for Amazon Flex, as long as you have your own personal car insurance as well. Please note that Amazon's commercial policy does not include any passengers accompanying you. In the event of an accident, and someone other than the Amazon Flex Delivery Partner running, the claim will be denied. For this reason, and the fact that another person will not be subject to Amazon's policies, it is best to go solo when making your runs. Amazon also discourages you from bringing pets with you, unless they are serving animals. *Please also note that in the State of New York this coverage does not apply. Drivers must obtain their own commercial insurance cover. We also recommend that you get additional coverage on your personal insurance that covers you as a delivery driver. This is not as expensive as commercial coverage, but it is important to have if you expect your insurance company to cover you in the event of a mishap, and they find that you are using your vehicle for delivery. Does Amazon Flex have vehicle requirements? Amazon's vehicle requirements differ based on the type of delivery you make. For Amazon Prime Now orders, you can use any vehicle that you want regardless of age or condition as long as you can safely complete the trips. Amazon.com orders require a 4-door, medium or large vehicle. Trucks, SUV's, and Vans work particularly well, just be sure the truck bed is covered. Some regions also allow for bicycle deliveries. You can also use a rented or borrowed car from places like HyleCar or Maven as long as you have proper documentation (licenses, registration, permits, insurance). How about driving experience requirements? Uber, Lyft, Via, Juno and other rideshare companies typically require at least one year's U.S.-based driving experience with a valid driver's license. Amazon Flex doesn't have any of these limitations, so you can be a Flex driver with even a week's driving experience with a valid driver's license. Amazon will conduct background checks that usually take anywhere from 2-5 days to complete. Anything related to theft or violence will disqualify you, along with a long history of major traffic violations. Amazon Flex background checks Although most of us don't have anything on our records to worry about, the words background check can produce a touch of anxiety in every driver. Let's address the problem by answering any questions you may have. Why is Amazon Flex running a background check? It's easy to understand why Amazon Flex background check, as their customers' packages will be in the hands of their drivers. You must be able to prove that you can be trusted to handle the goods, which are often quite valuable, without criminal intent. What does Amazon Flex background check cover? Amazon Flex background check goes back seven years to search for crimes. If you have any crimes on your record with theft or violence, you are not likely to pass. A driving background check will also be conducted, to ensure that you have not had an unreasonable number of moving violations. How long does it take to process amazon flex background check? Amazon Flex passes the job of checking backgrounds to an outside company specializing in this area. The check, under normal circumstances, only takes 2-5 days to complete, but it can take as long as 10 days to complete. If your check takes longer than 5 days, simply call Amazon Flex support to get a status on your background check. Assuming there is nothing in your records that may be a problem, you will up and run for Amazon Flex before you know it. Does Amazon Flex disable drivers? Why would they disable drivers? Amazon Flex does deactivate drivers for various reasons, including: Not having Hot/Cold Bags for Restaurant Pickup and Delivery Inactivity. You will be deactivated unless you schedule a shift for 180 daysTherefore deliverable packages/deliveries that are not returned to Amazon in timeFast deliveriesUnderstood shiftsBeing consistently late for shiftClose-down customer serviceLast many unworkable packagesPerformers other jobs under Amazon Flex (Uber Eats, Postmates, Doordash, etc) If you get deactivated, you get a nice letter that looks like this: Luckily you can usually apply for reinstatement if you haven't done something like stealing a package, or missing too many shifts. These deactivations are usually permanent. How do I get a job with Amazon Flex? The process of getting a job with Amazon Flex is pretty simple. You can start by going to . From there, Amazon will ask you to download the app where you can check if your city accepts new drivers. If Amazon is against drivers in your city, you can simply fill out the form and Amazon will start your background check. You'll also need to enter your tax information and watch their training videos that review your job expectations and requirements. After a few days you hopefully have a clean background check and Amazon will approve your profile and you can schedule your first shift. If Amazon doesn't accept drivers in your city, you'll need to join the waiting list and be notified when a seat opens. Is Amazon Flex better than Uber or Lyft? This is the million dollar issue! Amazon Flex certainly has its advantages. Salary of up to $25 per hour with an $18 hour minimum is great, however, it is very difficult to consistently get shifts. You can't just turn on your app and get deliveries like with rideshare or delivery apps, which means you're in the hands of Amazon and you'll have to fight a pool of hundreds of drivers to pick up shifts. That means you won't get anywhere near full-time hours. On the other hand, Amazon Flex is a simple gig that has little customer service, unlike Uber and Lyft which is a 100% customer service job. For these reasons, we believe that Amazon Flex is a great option for a rideshare or delivery driver who wants an easy way to pick up some high paying hours per week, but not something that you should bank on for more than a few hours per week. For an in-depth review of Amazon Flex, check out this driver's thoughts below: And if you'd rather do something completely different, consider jumping into a software development career by participating in a coding bootcamp like Kenzie. Remember to track your progress As a gig worker, you need to make the most of the time you spend running for any company you work with. That's why you need to download Gridwise, so you can see how much you earn, and which of your gigs pays the most. This amazing app allows you to record your earnings, track your mileage, and see all the facts and figures displayed in a super-useful format. You'll also get info about traffic, what's happening at the airport, events and weather, plus easy access to our blog. Our Perks tab features cool deals and discounts for drivers, and Gridwise YouTube Channel will amaze you with insight and entertainment. If that's not enough, there's even more on our Facebook page, where you can get into the big Gridwise gas card giveaways. So don't wait—download the app now. 126 If you want to be able to enjoy flexible hours and the $18/hr minimum wage to work for Amazon Flex, you first will have to pass the Amazon Flex background check, or I guess I should say checks (plural) because there are 2 of them that include a comprehensive criminal background check as well as a motor vehicle background check. The background checks come into play after you've first signed up to run for Amazon Flex, been contacted for interest, completed their survey, and been invited to download the app. It is when you have the app that you will be able to log in and give you driver's licenses and SSN so they can run the two background checks. Who conducts background checks? As for motor vehicle background checks, I'm unsure, but for the criminal background check Amazon contracts a third-party service called Proper Background to run background checks for its employees and partners. After you submit your information through the Amazon Flex background check app, that information is then forwarded to Background to run the control. If you have made a mistake and put in incorrect information, then you need to contact Accurate Background directly instead of Amazon. You can contact them at 800-216-8024 How long will it take? Amazon tells us that it should only take 2-4 days for the background check to clear, but this is only a general time interval. It may take much longer depending on what your background is. If you have a clean background and have provided all the right information, then it should clear up pretty quickly. But if you have a background full of crimes that Exact Background has to investigate, then it can take much longer. You may also be contacted by Correct Background for previous crimes that you have had. I have heard that it takes up to a month to be cleared of those with complicated backgrounds and many crimes. Are you still waiting? There is no way to know how far along the background check is. When you submit your SSN and give consent for them to run the control all you can do is sit back and wait. In the Flex app, it will appear pending while the background check is still in progress. If your check takes longer than you think it should and you're worried about it, the only advice I can give is to contact Correct Background on their 800-216-8024 support number. How far back does the check go? For the criminal background check, Accurate Background will check your story back 7 years. This is the same as related jobs like Uber and seems to be industry standard. If you have been convicted of crimes in this time interval you may not be qualified for the job. Note: However, I've heard cases of background checks missing offenses, so it may still be in your interest to apply as it only takes a few minutes. The nature of the breach makes a difference Amazon or proper background give details of what types of crimes and incidents they will let slip and what types will be banned. But the nature of crime matters. Amazon does not hire criminals of any kind as far as I know from my research. You may be able to get an Amazon job as a criminal going through some job agencies, but this doesn't apply to Amazon Flex driver positions. When it comes to misdemeanors, you have a chance to get hired even if they have occurred in the last 7 years. Minor motor vehicle violations also won't ruin your chances of being hired. How do you know when the background checks have been cleared? You won't receive any email or anything when your background check clears. So how are you supposed to know? Once you open up the Amazon Flex app, there will be a list of things that need to be completed before you are officially a driver. These include... Background Check Tax (info) Payment Information Videos (training) When the background check is still being carried out, it will say pending next to it. And when it's raced there be a green checkmark next to it. Will you pass? If you have a clean disc then of course you will pass. But if you have crimes on your criminal record or accidents on your driving record, then you probably aren't. You will not pass with any offenses in the last 7 years, and you will not pass with certain misdemeanors. But there are minor crimes that you will be able to pass with. The only real way to find out if you're passing or not is to sign up for Amazon Flex and find out. There's no reason not to do it unless you're sure you won't pass. It only takes a few minutes to register and it doesn't cost you anything. What is the next step after you pass honestly I do not think many people will have problems with not being able to pass. Most will be able to with flying colors. If you are one of those who do the passport, you can immediately start working. The next step would be to set up your availability calendar inside the app. This lets Amazon know when you are available to work and they will assign you blocks or shifts when they want you to deliver for them. Note: You can get assigned a low amount of blocks or even none at all. This is because there are a lot of Flex drivers and not enough blocks available. However, you can pick up more Amazon Flex blocks and you can learn how to do it here. Do you have something to share about a personalized experience with amazon flex background check? Comments?
