Intj gift guide

People always wonder: How can you please an INTJ? We are considered difficult, especially when it comes to social convention. If you have no idea what an INTJ is, this would be a good time to read about the Myers-Briggs Typology Indicator (MBTI) here. Birthdays can be confusing for the loved ones of INTJs, because we seem to be impossible to please, leaving friends and family feeling that they did something wrong or that we are ungrateful. On the contrary, we can be absurdly easy to please. Maybe this list can shed light on. As intj are these gifts I would love:Nothing. Zero. From most, I prefer no gift. No gift means no commitment or social signals of reciprocity to navigate. A nice, real email. Something personal, handmade or small, but meaningful. Share something of me online with a positive recommendation (Ex: my latest song, music video, my Patreon, albums, blog posts, such things). Just do this if you mean it though! Insincerity is extremely distasteful. Gift cards to a grocery store I frequent. Costco gift cards. Amazon gift cards. Gift cards to an affordable store I buy clothes from (there is a short list). Paid/free subscription to a service I use or want to use. One certain thing I've said definitively that I want. A piece of musical/recording equipment (whether it's an expensive microphone, software or just an XLR cable). Gift cards for music retailers like Guitar Center or Sweetwater are also great. Or just pay for a bow repair or set of new violin strings. A very cool or useful tech-related gadget, maybe something I won't easily splurge on myself. Smaller/less expensive things work well too. (Ideas: mirrorless camera, latest Amazon Echo, latest Apple Watch, iPhone, iPad, a smart home product like Hue or Nest, battery charger, stand, extension cord). A very cool or useful kitchen-related gadget, maybe something I won't easily splurge on myself (Ideas: Yonanas machine). Cheap things work amazingly too; I would be happy to receive a 6-pack of paper towels, some sweet potatoes, because it is convenient and I will definitely use it. A computer or phone accessory (Ideas: new Apple earbuds, lightning cable, MacBook charger, converter for one of the ports). A prepaid deep tissue massage with my one and only therapist (I really need it, but I don't let myself spend money on it very often, and thus a gift card or coupon for a massage would be a very nice thing for someone to do). Something funny that I would probably never consider spending money on (Ideas: handheld video game console, If you're going to try to give something out of left field, for the love of God, please bring a gift receipt. The gift of the courtship from a social event or other protocol. For example, if it makes you feel good to call me on my birthday, just know that I will not answer. That doesn't mean I'm appreciate it. But a lovely gift would be to leave a message and say in the message that I am not obliged to respond. General guidelines: Think practical. Don't think any pressure on the receiver. Don't do too much work because There are things I don't appreciate: Flowers. Some plants in general, really. I don't want anything I have to take care of, because it's hard enough to take care of myself. Greeting cards, unless they are very special or specific or very personal. I don't need any more shit to take up space. If you have something heartfelt to tell me, you do not need to put it in a card (although you can, if it is actually a specialized message); I love receiving birthday emails more than anything else. The gift of someone's presence. This includes parties or even taking me out for lunch. I simply do not want these things; They are much more of a burden than a gift. Jewelry, unless there is a very specific, targeted or unique reason. Books. Again, unless you specifically know that I want that book (and in that format). Decorations or tchotchkes, unless I have specifically mentioned that I want the item. Food or drink. I don't need cool or special food. I already have my own routine down pat, and it would be a waste of money/time plus forcing me outside my comfort zone and putting pressure on me to like what you've given me. Humorous gifts. All that creates work for me, whether it is to take care of the gift, need to buy lots of accessories for it to work, have to undergo extensive training to use the product, etc. Exception: If you know for a fact that I want this thing and am ready to commit to it. Last thoughts:I realize that this may sound scary. And I realize that you can mess up and give a wrong gift, but as long as you don't put any pressure on the INTJ receiver, everything is fine! We probably won't remember the gift anyway, but we'll remember if you were just gracious and chill. Personally, it only sticks out to me negatively if I'm guilt-triggered, pressured to like something, or if the gift donor constantly reminds me of the wonderful gift they gave me. Also, I realize that this looks like a list of very expensive things. But I can't stress enough that NO PRESENT is often the best gift of all. Cheap and convenient = fantastic. Sometimes a completely random, unexpected gift just works. * Shrug.* An excerpt from this post was originally published on Quora. Who says INTJs don't like Christmas? not me! It's Christmas, one of my favorite times of the year. As covered in the Elusive Fashion Habits range, INTJs may be the type that is most likely to talk itself out of buying something. If an item does not pass its strict logic and rational process, they often put it back on the shelf, even if it is something they want to have, and therefore it can be difficult to for an INTJ friend or loved one. Nevertheless, INTJs love a thoughtfully chosen gift. These days, there are many more introverted types of gifts to choose from, so it's easier than ever to find the perfect gift for INTJ. Of course, it can be difficult to find time to shop for that gift, so we've done some shopping to get started. If the following gift list doesn't quite get INTJ's passions or interests, think about it from this perspective: the key to winning on gift giving for INTJ is to get them something that's focused on their interest, something they didn't know they needed, or something they couldn't justify buying for themselves. Our INTJ gift list is generic, but we have divided it into gifts for him, and gifts for her. Hope it helps! (Edit– Check out our 2017 Christmas list here)P.S. None of my suggestions are sponsored.
