Carrier of Manufacturer of paper chains. Long wind. | NBC We're back this week with the weirdest episode of Little House on the Prairie yet. (We're in you, Victor French.) They are presented with elderly neighbor Miss Amy Hearn which is notable because 1. She is the Catholic again grove and 2. the longest lady on this side of the Mississipp'. After literally talking about her roommate and dear friend Miss Maddie to death, Miss Amy concocts a wild plan to fake her own death so she can see her children, whom she has not seen for a while, at her funeral. Somehow he manages to manipulate Doc Baker and the Ingalls family to go along with their crazy shenanigans and hilarity/ just simple rarity occurs. We're not sure what happens for the rest of the episode because we fell asleep while Miss Amy was in one of her long rants. Join us as Marissa tries to teach Amy and Julie about Catholicism. Julie downloads a ton of juicy details about the cast on the set of Little House, and then we all discuss how we want our remains dispossessed after death. (It's less macabre than it sounds.) Correction: Marissa meant that the construction paper was not invented until the 1900s... not in the 19th century. Explanation: Jeff is the brother of Amy and Julie who was a very sensitive/compassionate child. He became emotional (and in some cases, inconsolable) while watching many episodes of Little House... therefore, this scale. Key: 0 = Don't even rip us off. Jeff = We blurted out like fools. Amy Hearn is an old Walnut Grove resident whose children don't seem to be trying hard enough to visit her. In an act of desperation, Amy decides that organizing her own funeral is the only way to see them again, but it's a scam she herself can't pull off. Herself.
