Getty Images How much of a person can really only be told about their zip code? According to the spatial data company Esri, the answer is: quite something. Esri’s website has a zip search tool that allows visitors to find out the demographics of any zip code in the United States. So while you already know the best states in search of a new home, now you can learn even more about each particular neighborhood to find the right one for you. Here’s how it works: Esrin Tapestry segmentation divides neighborhoods into 67 separate segments based on socioeconomic and demographic composition to get a snapshot of what life is like in each place. For example, beverly hills’ famous 90210 zip code tapestry shows that 73 percent of residents are classified at the top level (that is, they are very rich and have everything they’ve ever wanted), 20 percent are listed as trendsters (that is, they are young professionals who care about the finest things in life) and 8 percent are in their retirement years. Esri And while the site isn’t entirely new, the summer migration season looks like the perfect agglomerations to take a deeper look at the neighborhood (or neighbors) you’re considering. Instead of webing a large, inconvenient phone book, you can find and verify zip codes and area codes online quite easily. If you have an address or partial address, you can find the zip code usps zip code through the search service, which is a tool on the U.S. Postal Service website. You can also search by city or state, or you can find all cities that are part of a specific zip code. The International Post Codes website, operated by Columbia University, has an extensive index of domestic and international zip codes, as well as mailing abbreviations, policies and best practices. You can also use different search engines to find zip code. For example, if you want to use Google to search for a zip code by address, type the address to see a map of the location that includes the zip code. You can even type some South Laurel MD zip code to see them all for that area (and find links that display a complete list of postcodes in the area). You can also enter a zip code to see the geographic location to which it belongs, as well as a map and other related web results, such as cities that use the zip code. If you didn't add a zip code at the end of your search, Google might display unrelated information. For example, search 90210 reveals information about a TV show, while a 90210 zip code displays postal code information. You can also find the zip code with DuckDuckGo. Enter your zip code and DuckDuckGo will return the map, zip code location, weather, property, and other relevant online results. Bing’s postcode search brings back the city/area it connects to, maps and local attractions such as grocery stores, hotels and cinemas. If you enter a partial address, Bing will complete it for you and reveal the zip code. Just like with a zip code, you can use a search engine to find the area code by searching for the city. To do the opposite and find out which part of the country the area code is associated with, just enter the area code in the search engine. To find a zip code using Google, type the name and state of the city you’re looking for, and then type the words region code. You usually find what you need. If you want international listings, look for a phrase like the Kenyan call code, and you'll get an informative response with the numbers you need to call that country. Type your city and state in a new Bing search and you'll probably see results like Google that show area code results The same applies to international international Codes. Another way to find the area code online is Wolfram Alpha, which bills itself as Com counted intelligence. This data-driven search engine doesn't show results like the other results mentioned on this page, but with a little digging, you'll find some unique data about cities and states that you might not find in another search engine. Using Yahoo to find an area code is much like using Google; Just enter the city and state name, followed by the area code, and you will get an immediate result. Finding international codes isn't as easy with Yahoo as it is with Google, but of course, you can still use Yahoo to find other websites that can give you this information. Many sites specialize in finding area codes that may not be revealed by a simple search engine query. You can use these free resources to find almost any area code and/or country call code in the world: Area codes: Includes area codes mostly from the U.S., although other countries are also scattered here. BT Phonebook: Use this site to find area codes in UK country codes: This site asks which country you’re calling from and where you want to assign the correct country code, region code, or both. LincMad: A zip code map that provides a visual image of regional codes in the U.S. and like Canada.AllAreaCodes.com: Like LincMard and any zip code of their own. We can thank a certain TV show in Beverly Hills for that. In addition to this, public knowledge of these five-digit figures is quite limited. We put them at the end of the addresses, and then our mail is magically delivered to the right place. But with the help of some doorable detection methods (online research), we found one of the most commonly kept secrets that all postmans know: what zipcodes really are and how they work. (Ok, so it's not really a secret, but now you have something to talk about for your postman.) Learn how to help USPS right now. Why do we use zip code? The whole practice of using postal code is a relatively new system, which will be in place on 1 July 1963. Before that, since 1943, the U.S. Postal Service used several postal zones only for large cities. If you were writing an address, the number would go after the city and the state, and the postman used it to sort mail more efficiently. Look what mail delivery looked like 100 years ago. What does every postcode number mean? In A postal worker named Robert Moon floated the idea of a new postal zone system that would cover the whole country. First number number Mr President of the Commission, on behalf of the European Union, on behalf of the European Union, on behalf of the European Union and on behalf of the European Union (training centre between the European Union and its Member States) (where mail is handled and distributed). This plan was eventually approved by the U.S. Postal Service, which ended with two digits indicating the appropriate postal or postal area, thus generating a zone improvement plan code, or zip code. Check out these other surprising facts from the U.S. Post Office. What do the four digits at the end of the zip code mean? About 20 years after the first postcodes were introduced, the Post Office made one more upgrade to the system: four numbers that come after your zip code. They concern a specific area covered by any post office. The sixth and seventh figures refer to the supply sector, which can be a group of streets, one large building or another small geographical area. The last two are delivery segments, such as the floor of an office building or the entire part of the street. While the U.S. Postal Service says that proper credit for creating a zip code goes to the People’s Committee, our addresses would look quite different without Moon’s numerical inspiration. In case you didn’t know that, you certainly don’t know these 23 secrets that your postman won’t tell you. Juanmonino/Getty ImagesGetty Images, rd.com peterspiro/Getty Images Images
