Dublin, December 29, 2020 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Increased Adoption Report of High-speed Automated Inspection Systems Powering the Global In-line Dimensional Metrology Equipment Market, 2025 was added to the ResearchAndMarkets.com. This research service analyses in detail the global market for in-line dimensional metrology equipment between 2019 and 2025, with 2020 as the base year. The study includes key advanced technologies, including CMMs, vision measuring machines (VMM), optical digitizers and scanners (ODS), as well as metrological software. This study provides a comprehensive overview of the market with key end-market applications, detailed factors and limitations and overall forecasts, as well as an analysis of the competitive environment. What's more, it provides insight into major companies such as Carl Zeiss AG, Hexagon Manufacturing Intelligence, Perceptron, Faro Technologies, Mitutoyo and Nikon Metrology. Regional analyses are provided for North America, Europe, Asia Pacific (APAC) and rest of the world (RoW). This research also highlights the future growth opportunities and strategic imperatives that market participants need to take to capitalise on these growth opportunities. The global market for in-line dimensional metrology devices is in the nascent state of its life cycle. In 2020, the market generated revenue of $323.0 million and has fallen 14.4% since 2019. The ongoing Coronavirus pandemic has affected demand for the latest dimensional metrology technology and investment in 2020, with a recovery planned for 2021. The author expects a scenario in which the quality assurance process moves more to production. There is a growing trend of moving machines closer to the shop floor to increase the number of applications in the production line or close to the line. As an integral part of the production chain, a holistic approach to control is increasingly needed. Compared to traditional work, an integrated and holistic control process will have a better chance of developing dimensional metrology equipment in a dynamic market. Key topics:1.
