In the early to mid-80s it was located on Thompson Lane near today's Performance Studios - formerly HH Gregg - formerly famous for public sales. When Gregg opened the building they demolished parking and moved to the current location of McCall. We only lived a few blocks from here in 1984, but for some reason we never ate here - a big mistake. My wife worked on the other side of the Thompson Lane tunnel and sometimes ate here with her aunt. There is no better place in town to spice up Bamboo Chicken. The Omni Hut Smyrna is a close second, but Siam is more salty and not that thick. My coworker took me here last week to return the favor. I brought bamboo chicken, fried rice and pasta. - about $6. The egg drop soup came with it, but it was a little thick and rich to my taste. Love, love, love is pasta and bamboo chicken. I've already decided that my next trip will be half pasta and half bamboo chicken... I forgot how good it really is! There's a certain Thai restaurant I often like, and that stopped me from exploring more Thai restaurants in Nashville (esp South Nashville) and that's a shame! Because I finally checked out of Siam Cafe last Saturday for lunch with a friend and... it was GREAT. The Siam Cafe is family owned (owned by the Silpacharn family) and has been open since 1976! It's mccall, just off Nolensville Road, south of Nashville (my neighborhood). There is a small parking lot in the front (which was in plenty of locations when I arrived around 1pm for lunch with my friend but it was completely full when we stayed around 3pm). The restaurant is simple, charming, traditional, casual. We sat in the back room, which has some homely charm, for sure. I had the satee (grilled marinated chicken bamboo spit with homemade hazelnut sauce and cucumber salad) and tiger tear salad (grilled sliced beef with onions, seasoned chili peppers, lime juice, and fried rice powder on bed salad). Both were excellent. The peanut sauce that came with the satee was amazing and the chicken wasn't dry! Beef was great. It's so peppery. My friend had the Panang curry chicken which I tried and really enjoyed. We also had Thai tea which was really good. Everything we tried was good and I'm happy to go back and try more based on the quality we tried. And the service was excellent. You really feel at home and welcome to the Siam Cafe! I would definitely recommend it to anyone looking for a new Thai restaurant! very good. He's going to be back. More back. More
