If you are looking for a new job, an excellent RESUME is crucial to landing an interview with a hiring manager. But what exactly should your CV look like? You can stop searching google for best resume advice Clark.com have everything you need to know! Clark's Guide to a Perfect Resume We reached out to Laurie Berenson, professional resume writer and founder of Sterling Career Concepts, to give us samples before and after resuming. Following the same techniques that Berenson uses with his clients can help your RESUME end up in the yes pile. Let's get started on taking a look at the pre-resume for John B. Doe. Many hiring managers spend less than 10 seconds over a single resume, so you need to be able to catch their attention – but this resume doesn't. You can have all the experience in the world, but a resume that is not readable and frothy will get you nowhere. Before Resuming Berenson gave our sample resume a complete makeover. The end result is a modern, professional resume that makes a good first impression in the top half of the first page. After Resume Does your RESUME look more like the before-picture than after? Berenson's secrets to resuming success will help you craft a RESUME that gets you an interview. Here are her top tips: Don't trust Microsoft Word templates. Create a custom resume with a professional border, incorporate a small amount of color, and don't be afraid of bold or italics. Avoid going too small on the font and use white space strategically. 2. Losing Case Statement Objective Statements focus on what you're looking for, but companies honestly don't care about it. Replace the objective statement with a brief summary that lays out the value you offer an employer. 3. Areas of expertise Areas section is a list of keywords that highlight your specific skills and knowledge. Your core competencies should be customized to match the skills mentioned in a job description. Put the most important keywords in the first column on the left and top of each column that reads over. Make the work experience section shine by leading with the most valuable thing you bring to the table. For easy reading, avoid long paragraphs and collision sentences. A good rule of thumb is to group your responsibilities into short paragraphs to introduce your role and add bulleted lists to list your achievements. 5. Knowing when to go Bold Using Bold can help your performance pop off page and/or distinguish between job items. Consider kicking off your performance points with added value results or utility in bold. Notice how these examples from our sample resume all use strong and compelling action verbs: Grew direct-to-consumer e-commerce 90% and exceeded the revenue forecast 28% of measurable acquisition strategies such as pay-per-click (PPC) and retargeting. Contributed to the 20% year increase in inside sales by launching its own sales support website that allowed sales teams to create on-demand catalogs tailored to the preferences of international markets. Increased 2012 revenue 15% year /year and increased conversion rates by performing targeted email marketing campaigns. 6. Use Bullet Points Wisely A common resume mistake is to use too many points! If your work experience section is simply a list of items, they lose efficiency because the reader's eyes glaze right over them. Reserve bulleted lists for items that you really want to select. A one-sided resume is generally sufficient for a young professional, but a two-pager is preferred for more experienced job seekers. If your resume goes to a second page, include a header with your name, phone number, and email address in case the pages become separated. You can also include your LinkedIn profile address in your head if your profile is updated. 8. Right Font, Right Size Avoid overused fonts like Times New Roman and Arial, and instead try Calibri or Cambria. In terms of font size, 10.5 or 11-point is usually the way to go. 9. What to leave of your RESUME Did you notice that our revised sample resume omits the John B. Doe street address? Many applicants are just listing their city, state and zip codes because of concerns about identity theft – and that's okay. Something else to exclude is the Professional References Available Upon Request line at the bottom. It's obvious! Once you've been working for more than five years, it's also not necessary to list every position from early in your career – or even your graduation date – if it's not relevant. By the way, the latest grads are recommended to only include their GPA if it is 3.5 or higher. Final Thought If you haven't looked at your resume in more than a year, Berenson told Clark.com it's a good idea to dust it off and update it so you're ready when the perfect job opportunity comes. When you're done with it, have a family member or friend look over to check the grammar, tense and spelling. Overwhelmed by all this? A job seeker may want to consider working with a resume expert if they struggle to write about themselves or if they are not being called for interviews.
