In case you are wondering about the integrity of Terrarium TV for Android, then we want to clarify that this app is not actually a multimedia streaming service provider. Instead, it integrates all streaming links for movies and TV shows from around the web under a single platform, giving you a selection between different playback qualities such as 480p, 720p and 1080p, to name just a few. So the selection of servers is completely dependent on you and allows you to either stream or download the content. For example, if you selected a particular movie, the play button redirects you to the server's link menu. You are then allowed to start streaming the movie from any link you want free. Interestingly, the exact same link you download the videos to be viewed later without an internet connection. Yes, that's an exciting feature! Now that we move on to the settings menu, there are several options available for users to enable/disable the appropriate one. Some of the essential settings are: Select the default video player in the options available for YESPlayer, ExoPlayer, MX Player, and VLC Player. It is entirely up to the user to mark the videos viewed or not. Choose to filter the non-English programs from the list. Also choose between viewing HD links and other low-quality videos. There are multiple options available for standard play action where you always select to always ask, play, download or stream. With the performance settings, you select the video refresh time interval. Turn new release notifications on/off to keep up to date with the latest trends. Redetermine the interface by personal taste and interests. You select TV shows or movies as the default navigation. Changes can also be made to the standard category for both TV shows and movies. Choose to read the details and synopses related to a particular movie or show or else completely un-check all the boxes. The font size, color, and other font styles for the subtitles can be changed. It comes with the ability to back up your settings.
