Rapitest soil test kit video

Testing your soil helps determine the amount of nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium, or potash, contains it, and what kind of modifications it needs to help your plants grow. Simple soil testing kits are inexpensive and are available in most retail orphanages. Luster Leaf makes several types of soil testing kits called Rapitest. Most include a test for pH, which is soil acidity levels, as this level is a factor in how plants can raise nutrients well. To test the soil in the garden bed where you planted shrubs, perennials, vegetables or fruit, dig down 4 inches with teruel and take a small sample on that level. For lawns, annuals and plants in the house, take a sample of 2 or 3 inches below the soil surface. Take every weed, weed, root, stone and the like, but try to avoid touching the soil with your hands. In a large area, take several samples because the soil can vary. Don't mix samples together; test them each separately. Place each soil sample in a container and let it dry naturally. When dry, use the teruel or spoon to finely swallow it and mix it thoroughly. The green pH tester in the package is Rapitest. Turn off your lid, make sure the color chart is in place. Fill one of the capsules into the soil line with soil samples. Keep the capsule horizontally on the test chamber; separate the green capsule halves, and pour the powder into the test chamber. Use the reducer to add water to the water filling line. Wear the hat again and shake completely. Let the soil settle for about a minute, then compare the soluble color with the pH chart. This is easiest if you keep the test up to light, but not direct sunlight. The ratio for these experiments is 1 part soil to 5 parts of water. Place this mixture in a pan, and shake or stir for at least a minute until thoroughly mixed. Then let it sit intact to settle, which can take 30 minutes to 24 hours depending on the type of soil. The clearer the solution, the better, although cloudyness will not affect test accuracy. Take a hat off the test you wish to build and take out the corresponding colored capsules. Using the drewer, fill the test and reference chambers to mark the filling with the solution of your soil sample. Use liquid only; Prevent harassment in the process. Keep the capsule horizontally on the test chamber; Wear the hat, and shake completely. Let the color develop for 10 minutes, then compare it to the color chart. Repeat the experiment for all three soil elements. Keep this kit out of reach of children and pets, and away from animal feed. Store it indoors in clean and dry conditions. Avoid touching the powders, and wash your hands thoroughly after the tests. If the powders are consumed by chance, drink large amounts of water and seek medicine After testing, rinse the solutions down the sink and dispose of the capsules in the waste. Remove the color charts and replace them after washing the comparators and warheads in hot and soapy water. Good rinse and dry. Dry.
