Jonathan DeCamp, bus line president, said the decision to suspend operations was not made on It's heartbreaking. Not only for our employees, but also for our passengers, who rely on us to get in and out Said. The home stay orders that resulted from the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic caused DeCamp to halt service on March 28. Bus service resumed June 8, hoping the cavalry would return as New Jersey and New York began their opening processes. Before the pandemic, DeCamp buses carried an average of 6,500 to 7,000 passengers a day. Now, ridership is up to an average of 400 passengers a day, according to Jonathan DeCamp. DeCamp representatives said the company has exhausted all of its available financial resources, including an attempt to stretch its paycheck protection program funding from eight weeks to 17 weeks. In addition, he said, when New Jersey received $1.4 billion in assistance from the Federal Transportation Authority, that amount was given to NJ Transit, and none was given to private bus carriers. It remains to be seen how long the suspension will last, DeCamp said, saying the length of the suspension depends on when offices in New York start reopening and commuters start returning to those offices. With the exception of two employees in finance and human resources, all 150 to 160 employees will be furloughed, DeCamp said. In a subsequent statement early Wednesday night, company representatives said the company was facing a 97 percent drop in riders by the time it initially suspended service in March. Without access to the federal CARES Funding Act or the passage of the Coronavirus Economic Assistance for Transportation Services Act (CERTS), we had no choice but to suspend service again to conserve resources until passenger volumes returned to sustainable levels, said a spokesman for The August 5. NJ Transit, DeCamp, and other transit agencies in the area saw steep drop-offs in riderty since March, as many commuters began working from home. NJ Transit reported that its ridership fell as much as 90 percent as a result of COVID-19. DeCamp was founded in 1870 as a stagecoach company serving northern New Jersey and New York. Many Montclair residents use #33 and #66 DeCamp buses to commute to New York.DeCamp riders who have already purchased tickets are advised to stick with them, DeCamp said. Once the service is resumed, the expiry date of these tickets will be extended. We just thank our public, they were our loyal customers, DeCamp said. Essex County Freeholder President Brendan Gill sent a letter to Gov. Phil Murphy on Friday asking him to seek state and transportation local help for DeCamp and other private bus carriers. Residents of Montclair, Bloomfield, West Orange, and other surrounding communities in Essex County depend on the services of DeCamp. Without reliable commuter and charter transportation services companies, the quality of life for so many of our residents will be severely affected in a negative way, Gill wrote. Gill also quoted from the Bus Association of New Jersey that private bus carriers account for approximately 35 percent of scheduled bus service in New Jersey.On August 7th, the U.S. coach announced that he would be cross-honoring DeCamp tickets, in an agreement with DeCamp, from Monday, August 10 to August 31. We are pleased to be in a unique situation in which we are able to work with DeCamp to keep Jersey strong and offer a convenient solution to the commuter public, Scott Sprengel, executive vice president of Coach USA, told 7.su. NJ Transit is committed to helping facilitate a smooth transition for customers and will continue to work with DeCamp as the transportation industry feels the effects of the pandemic and then enters the recovery process, but NJ Transit does not have the resources to absorb the DeCamp line. Those alternatives include the Montclair-Boonton and Morris & Essex rail lines when they resume operations after this week's storm, NJ Transit spokeswoman Nancy Snyder said. NJ Transit will also cross-honor DeCamp tickets on the following routes from August 8 to August 31: NJ TRANSIT Buses No. 28 & 29 serve various stretches of Bloomfield Avenue (DeCamp #32, 33 & 88), and No. 13 in Nutley, fed by NJ TRANSIT railway stationsNo. 191 serves MontclairNo. 324 provides express services from Wayne Transit CenterNos. 192/199 to serve Allwood Park and Ride at Clifton Clifton
