June 2005 U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Service projects can be enriching way to give back to your community. If you want to make the most of your experience with the community, try to find a project that reflects your skills and interests. For example, if you like being outdoors, consider helping beautify your local park by picking up garbage or planting trees. Jeanne Studio/Demand Media Volunteering at animal shelter can be a rewarding experience for people to be around animals. Contact your local shelter to see if further assistance is needed; available jobs may include cleaning or playing with animals. If you are unable to volunteer at the shelter, consider setting up a fundraiser or head donating to drive for the benefit of the rescued animals. Find out what specific needs the shelter has in terms of supplies or general funding, then follow that. Host a pet escort or the most affectionate pet contest in your area and require each participating pet owner to pay a small entry fee or donate pet supplies useful to the animal shelter. Jeanne Studio/Demand Media Make a Difference in a Child's Life by offering new skills and company through a youth-focused community services project. One option is to spend your time touting children in subjects they might be struggling with; choose the subject you feel comfortable with and enjoy making the most of the experience for you and your child. If you are an athlete, consider volunteering to train a youth sports team, or if you are gualified in another recreation area, such as music or art, volunteer to teach classes for free. You can simply spend time with a child who does not have company; this quality time should help build social skills and self-esteem. Jeanne Studio/Demand Media Visit your local nursing home to spend time with residents; Whether you're teaching a class or simply spending your time chatting, you'll provide an invaluable resource to society. If you don't feel comfortable visiting a retirement home alone, gather a group of friends or community members to entertain residents with songs or games. And if you have a calm, friendly pet like a dog, learn about it along with you on your visits for some pet therapy. Jeanne Studio/Demand Media If you love the outdoors, an environmentally focused community services project could be right into your alley. Voluntarily clean the garbage in your area, or time planting trees and flowers to beautify edible outdoor public space. Alternatively, investigate various environmental organizations to find one about which you feel particularly strongly. Volunteer offer for the organization you choose by committing to spread the word about the cause for some time. Consider starting a fundraiser in your area to help keep the organization financially stable. Serving as a volunteer in the community can be very rewarding for individuals and families. There is no need to travel abroad to serve people in need as you can find many volunteer opportunities in your local community. Evaluate your interests, skills, and available time before choosing how community services are available. There are community service options to suit every type of personality, including improving local parks and promoting literacy in the city library. Promoting volunteering opportunities in nature can enable interested individuals to have a positive impact on natural spaces within their community. Check with the parks and recreation department in your hometown; many cities have structured volunteering programs to maintain local parks. Search opportunities through local community gardens, which often seek volunteers to help water and maintain flowers and vegetable plots. Finally, they have provided opportunities with Greenpeace and other large environmental organizations for community service options that support learning and literacy in the community. Talk to volunteer coordinators in public schools about getting permission to volunteer regularly in the classroom or mentor a high-risk student. Many schools have structured after-school programs run by volunteers that feature both fun activities and teacher training. If you are interested in promoting literacy in your hometown, check with your local public library about becoming a volunteer. They often need consistent volunteers to help with book shelves and lead story time for kids. Evaluate fitness opportunities among different age groups in the community. If you are able to make a significant time commitment, contact your local parks and recreation department about becoming a head or assistant coach for the youth sports team. Contact your local retirement and senior centers for opportunities to help seniors with fitness. Follow opportunities through local YMCA and Boys & amp; Girls clubs to help support afterschool fitness and sports programs for high-risk youth. Contact your local homeless shelters, food pantry and soup kitchen for volunteer opportunities that support the necessary community members. Many homeless shelters need volunteers in many functions, including and fundraising duties. Whole families can become regular volunteers in the local soup soup Even children can help with food delivery and clean-up needs in centers that provide free or low-cost meals for individuals in need. Many food banks also look for volunteers to stock shelves and organize donations. Looking for ways to help others? Are you interested in community services and want to know more about it? Read this guide to learn what a community service is, examples of community services, and how you can find service projects that interest you. What is a community service? A community service is work performed by a person or group of people that benefits others. This is often done near the area where you live, so your own community reaps the benefits of your work. You don't get paid to perform community service, although sometimes food and small gifts, like a T-shirt, are given to volunteers. Community services can help every group of people in need: children, the elderly, people with disabilities, English language learners and more. It can also help animals like those in the shelter, and it can be used to improve places like a local park, historic building, or scenic areas as well. Community services are often organised through a local group, such as a place of worship, a school or a nonprofit. You can also start your own community service as part of a class requirement to graduate from high school or become a member of certain organizations, such as the National Honor Society. Adults can also participate in community services as a way to help others, or if ordered to do so by a judge. What are the examples of community service? There are hundreds of ways to engage in community services, depending on your skills and interests. Some common examples of community services include: Working with schoolchildren: Schooling, collecting school supplies for donation, planting a school garden. Working with the elderly: Visiting residents of the retirement center, providing meals to the elderly, keeping them at appointments. Improving the environment: Organizing a recycling competition, planting trees, creating a new route in the natural center. Helping low-income people: Passing food in the soup kitchen, collecting used clothes to be donated, making first aid kits for homeless shelters. There are many benefits of participating in community services, and some of the most important ones are listed below. They have the opportunity to help others: This is often the most important advantage of the public service. Participating in it gives you the opportunity to know that you are improving someone's life and making your community better, and you will get to see the direct impact of your work. Get a hands-on experience: You can learn a lot of skills while performing community services like construction, painting, customer service, and medical skills. You can also include a civil service job in your CV. Learn more about different careers: Sometimes you can focus your community service on an area where you might want to work. Some examples of this include volunteering at an animal shelter if you are thinking of becoming a veterinarian, working in a hospital, if you want to be a doctor, or volunteering at a museum if you like history. Experience gained from community services can help you get an internship or job in the future, and it also gives you the opportunity to see how much you would really enjoy a particular career. Personal growth: Doing community service also has personal benefits. This often makes participants more organized, responsible and compassionate, which are all good gualities to have, as well as gualities that colleges and employers like to see among applicants. Make new friends: The ultimate benefit is that you can meet many great people while doing community service. Community service is often done in groups, so it's easy to be friends with the people you work with. You can also become friends with the people you help, especially if you volunteer in the same place regularly. Where can you find community service projects? Your school or groups to which you belong: This may include clubs, places of worship, community centers, or any other organization of which you are a member. To find community service options, check out their website, board, or newsletter. If you are a student, your school may also have a community services club that makes it easier to get involved. Places you'd like to volunteer: If you have a specific place where you'd like to perform community services, such as a hospital or animal shelter, contact them and ask if they're taking volunteers. Your community itself: You can also look for opportunities at City Hall or similar buildings. Also, check out your city's website or newsletter. Many of them contain a section that contains current volunteer opportunities. What's next? Did you know that your volunteer work can make you money for college? It can!
