This is the old floor light Mogul Reflector Candelabra to show the configuration of cluster 3 lamps center holder (holding mogul socket), and 10 reflector bowl sitting on the holder. It requires a lampshades with reflector cables - small humps on the upper cross wires that fit on the top edge of the bowl. Large 3-Way Mogul bulbs can create too much heat for shadows with a small opening. This can be a fire hazard, or at least - it will shorten the lifespan of your lampshades by changing colors and drying them causing them to disintegrate. Shown here with Neck Adapter ($6.00) 1/4F IPS bottom, 1/8M IPS top (bottom fit standard 1/4 IPS floor lamp pipe size; top fit standard 1/8 IPS socket.) 10928AB antique finish, $30.00.Item E463 shown on the right is 5 high, and holds only mogul socket. The hole at the bottom slips over the IPS pipe 1/4. Will not accept standard intermediate base sockets, as turn knobs do not line up with holes on the sides of the holder. $20.00 click this link for many options There is a big difference in the quality of the socket. The Deluxe socket shown below is much heavier than standard, and much easier to assemble & disassembled, compared to regular snap-in type sockets. The shell is threaded at both ends. The captive ring slips on top of the hat, and threads into the top of the shell after transfer. Couldn't be easier! If you've ever had to unpack a regular snap-in socket, you'll really appreciate this feature. The old regular snap-in socket is fine, until you get ready to separate them. Nine times out of 10, you'll break the socket trying to pry the cap or when applying pressure where it says, Press Here. The Deluxe Socket solves this problem, and is worth the price difference.
