There is a greenhouse on the outskirts of the city to make food not in the barn. On the edge is the darkness that nobody must go by. There is pipework that controls all embers water supply. A river runs right through the pipework so Ember can get their water. With Doon working in Pipeworks Doon they run through Pipeworks aching for a way out. When they arrived at the end they discovered a river and boat that was supposed to be used by Ember residents. Also they found a journal saying ember builders took 100 adults and 100 children to ensure the human race would survive. As they climb a steep mountain and go out into the world above, they never imagine that they live underground. They took a rock and tied a note for it hoping someone would find it and come join them in the world above Ember, the real world. In this novel, the City of Ember by Jeanne DuPrau (located in the writer's part) antagonists occurs as the same guy who causes all power outages. From what we know he went by mayor number seven from many years ago. He is the man who believes that in a locked metal box holding a cure for his illness, he ended up dying and dropping a box in his cupboard scattered 200 years later the box quietly clicked the open states of the novel on page 3. Another antagonist is current leader of Ember Mayor Cole (to learn about Mayor Cole going to the character section.) He's a selfish person who just wants himself to escape from Ember and by holding evidence from his people. Cimals are the highest point! The cloak of the story is when Lina and Doon find a map of the way to the world above Ember. The only problem is that the map was torn and ricotted, but they managed to take it back together. Then they've got into the pipeworks looking for the world above the embers. People vs. Nature is important to the story because when Lina and Doon are trying to find a way out of Ember the power outage becomes more frequent. They know that soon the power will come out indefinitely, but they also know there is a way out it is a race against time for them, they must get to the world out next door before the lights go for . Also in the book The City of Ember one of the main themes is people vs. people. This is the main theme as Lina tries to find a way out while Mayor Cole just wants to find a way out for herself As he and Doon set aside their differences, they found a way out before the mayor did not. Also Lina and Doon want mayor Cole to reveal what she knows and shares her secrets with Ember. The result of the story is that at the end of friendship and perseverance is always applicable. For example Doon and Lina aside aside differences and being friends to save Ember. Also They are determined to find a way out of Ember. It just shows that there is no mater how old you can still make a difference. Ember is a city built for people to live for 200 years. The builder who built the city wrote instructions for Ember citizens out of town after 200 years and got the paper in the box. The protagonists, Lina and Doon, revealed the instructions, however, it was ripped off by Lina's sister, Poppy. Lina and Doon worked together to figure out missing words to find her way out. Meanwhile, Mayor Cole told Ember citizens that he had found a solution to fix the generator, which has caused severe blackouts across the city. The generator was only built to last 200 years, but it has been 241 years, and food stores and goods are almost empty. Ember residents are taught that everything in their rural areas is darkness (classified as an unknown area) and nothing else in the world, but that is a lie.
